VETOES EXPLAINED.

actual operation it will appear that they, as well as everybody else, have been improved in condition by our larger trade with Canada. But the bill was framed and came to me in a form calculated to mislead as to its effect. In the first clause all agricultural implements were declared to be free, and a great many were named. These same implements were named in the Payne bill, and were made free in that bill from any country which permitted our agricultural implements to enter it without duty. This opened to England the market of the United States for agricultural implements. As a matter of fact, the price of agricultural implements in America is cheaper, as shown by a report of the Bureau of Trade Relations of the State Department, to the American farmers than to any farmers in the world. England is the one country that exports agricultural implements to any great extent, and as successful in the competition against her in this country of American agricultural implements that practically very few have come in from England. This first clause, therefore, of the free-list bill offers no boon to the farmers at all, although apparently drawn for the purpose of inducing them to think so. It does contain some very general words at the close of the special-mentioned articles which by interpretation might be made to include 150 different articles used on the farm, but used in other vocations also. And these articles—the hammers, the tools, the cutlery, and the machinery of various kinds—are now dutiable under the metal schedule. To admit them under this clause would be to destroy entirely the symmetry of the metal schedule and produce such a confusion as seriously to interfere with the administration of the tariff act.

The bill was so loosely drawn, it was drawn on such a wrong principle, and with so little information, and it purported to do so many things which it did not do, that I had no hesitation in vetoing it.

The Cotton Bill.

"Finally, the cotton bill came to me. This bill differed from the others in being a bill for which the Democrats alone, and not the insurgent Republicans, were responsible. It passed the House on the report of the ways and means committee made without the taking of any evidence of persons interested in the manufacture or anyone else; it had completely changed the method of classifying cottons, classifying them according to the threads in the yarn instead of by the threads of the piece and the specific duty upon the square yard, as in the present bill. This was a most important change, and it had been adopted after an informal communication in writing with the Bureau of Standards and after an adverse report by the Treasury exports. The bill was adopted unanimously as a free-trade bill by the House. It came to the Senate and was passed in the form in which it passed the House, except that certain amendments were added. One was an amendment cutting down the metal schedule by a sweeping reduction of 25 per cent, and the other was an amendment of the chemical schedule with a purported reduction of 25 per cent. So hastily was the bill thrown together, so little attention was paid to the consideration of it in the Senate, especially in the chemical schedule, that the most ludicrous results were reached. In the first place, although the amendments radically changed the metal and chemical schedules, no change was made in the title, which still read "An act to reduce duties on cotton manufactures." An amendment was introduced in order to make certain that in the cotton and chemical schedules there must be a reduction of all rates to not more than 25 per cent ad valorem, but it was so placed in the act that by its language it could only apply to goods already in the customhouse, upon which duty had not been paid. The calculations by which the specific duties in the chemical schedule were transmitted into ad valorem rates and then reduced 25 per cent were exceedingly faulty. The Senator who proposed the reductions said that he had secured the services of a statistician at the Treasury Department, who had done the work as he told him to do it, and that that was all he knew about it.

"The bill was impossible and of course I vetoed it. There was in the passage of the bill, in the amendments, and in the general treatment an indication that the support of the bill was based rather on a desire to make a political record in favor of lower duties than upon a serious proposal to change the law. At least this is the only explanation that can be offered of the carelessness, inartificial, and altogether unsatisfactory character of the three bills.

For Sane Tariff Revision.

"I am in favor of the reduction of the tariff wherever it can be done and still give a living measure of protection to those industries of the country that need it. But I insist that we have reached now a point in the history of tariff making when everyone ought to realize that the tariff should not be changed and business disturbed, except upon information which shall enable us to pass bills that will disturb it least. Our whole business system rests upon the protective-tariff basis. The real hope of men who are in favor of lowering duties is to pursue the policy of securing accurate information to keep the tariff rates down as low as possible consistent with the life of the business protected. The natural operation of the tariff under those conditions and American ingenuity is to continue to reduce the cost of production, and that in itself will secure, if we adhere to the policy, a reduction of the tariff rates from time to time; but to cut them now 'with blacksmith's tools,' is to invite in the next two or four years a revaluation of feeling, and then a recurrence of higher rates and the old system of high tariffs. This I would deprecate, and so far as I can with the powers given me by the constitution, I propose to stop such a movement and to secure a reduction in accordance with the principles of the Republican platform, and on information accurate and impartial. If that policy is not approved by the electorate, then, of course, those of us who are now in office must give way to men who will carry out a different policy; but while we are in office our position ought clearly to be understood. We follow this policy not only because we are pledged to it, but because we believe it right, because we believe that a full discussion and a clear perception on the part of the people will convince them ultimately to approve and adopt it."

DOWNWARD COURSE.

Fast Being Realized by Roseburg People.

A little backache at first. Daily increasing until the back is lame and weak.

Urinary disorders quickly follow; Diabetes and finally Bright's disease.

This is the downward course of kidney ills. Don't take this course. Follow the advice of a Roseburg citizen. J. P. McCarthy, S. Stephens St., Roseburg, Ore., says: "For a long time I had trouble from my back and kidneys and my condition gradually grew worse. I did not have much backache but the unnatural condition of the kidney secretions plainly showed that my trouble was caused by inactive kidneys. The good reports I heard concerning Doan's Kidney Pills led me to procure this remedy at the Marsters Drug Co. and give it a trial. It brought relief and I am now free from kidney complaint. Doan's Kidney Pills are worthy of my endorsement."
