

MARCH 13, 1912.

THE WAY SOME PEOPLE GO INTO THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

The following story is told by Elbert Hubbard in the Feb. Philistine: "Yesterday a man whose eighty adjoins mine on the north, drove up in front of the shop and sent in word that he wanted me to come out and see something. I went out, climbed onto his wagon, looked down into a barrel, and what do you think I saw?

A mother skunk with six little white and black skunklets, their eyes just open. No, Terese, the skunk is not an extinct animal. My friend lifted the kittens and handed them and passed them around for admiration. He stroked them lovingly. And certainly they were beautiful, blinking, fluffy, innocent little propositions, guiltless of any thought that their ancestors had violated the Sherman Act thru deeds in restraint of trade.

This farmer was once a floorwalker in a Buffalo department store. He became inflated by a booklet showing how hens lay eggs and hatch them in geometrical progression. You know how the poultry books tell it. Well, he quit his job, moved to East Aurora, and built five long poultry houses with board floors. And behold the skunks came, and they worked time and a third. Behold again, they increased in a geometrical way, even if the chickens didn't. Soon there were no chickens. Then the man, being practical, said, "Oh skunks! Chickens be damned—me for the skunks." Few men, indeed, there be who can cash in their mistakes and make money out of their blunders. This is genius. My friend with the skunks has grown into a skunk expert. He raises hundreds of them and manages to make a good income out of the business. He says that skunks have great affection, and that when once you have an understanding with them, they are free from all conduct that might be criticised by the captious.

He offered to sell me the family in the barrel for twenty dollars, thus starting me in the business, but I declined to interest myself, pleading an excess of literary duties.

And so it goes. Many who start in the poultry business would do much better in some other business, unless they keep the skunks and other destructive animals and mites away from the chickens. It is just as imperative that you should keep your chickens free from lice and mites and keep the house sanitary, as it is to keep the skunks out.

Empire Livery, Feed and Sales Stables, Banks & Welker, proprietors. New rigs of all varieties, good gentle teams and careful drivers; also teams that are safe for ladies to drive. Blacksmith shop in connection; all work guaranteed. Phone 5.
