THE LITTLE FELLER.

Little feller, little feller,
Runnin' all around the ranch
Playin' with the calves and chickens,
Sailin' boats down in the branch,
Ridin' on your saddle pony,
'Cross the breezy prairie ways—
Little feller, little feller,
How you brighten up our days.

Little feller, when we hear you,
Laughin' that clear childish note,
How it makes the worries scatter—
How like mist our troubles float;
How the frowns we wore are vanished,
How the harsh thoughts die away;
Little feller, little feller,
How you heal us in your play.

How you bring the good that's in us
To the forefront of our souls;
How you keen the days unfoldin'
Like a wealth of golden scrolls;
Live without you, little feller?—
Why, the thought jest makes us sick;
You're the sun of our existence
On this ranch at Lonesome crick.

—Arthur Chapman in the Denver Republican.

A merchant who thinks only of "the cost" of advertising often persuades himself that, by advertising only half as much as usual, he is saving one-half the expense. The same logic would lead him to keep his store open but half the time thus cutting running expenses in two and "saving" all the expense for half the time. The plan of adequate advertising service—for your advs. do render valuable service to your patrons—is as essential to store success as the plan of keeping the store open every shopping day. Try it a while in The Review.

ADVANTAGES OF THE BRICK ROAD

It Wears Best, Costs Less to Build and Is Never Dusty.

NEEDS LITTLE REPAIRING.

If Laid Properly With a Smooth Four Inch Concrete Base, a Two Inch Sand Cushion and a Cement Filler—Good In Any Weather.

The proper dimensions of a brick highway where they have been in use for a number of years is fourteen feet in width, with a seven foot clay track on the side. Many of them are built about nine feet in width, with a seven foot clay road on the side.

Such roads are built in many parts of this country at a cost of $8,000 to $10,000 a mile, says a writer in Good Roads. They have underneath that a four inch concrete base. That four inch concrete base is advisedly made smooth. Upon it is placed a two inch sand cushion that is uniformly compressed by using a hand roller weighing about 250 pounds. Two things are accomplished by that method. You have a uniform wearing plate, you have a support of the wearing surface that is uniform, and yet it has resiliency, so that neither the brick nor the cement that is placed between the brick is at all injured in surface and will last indefinitely. After this foundation is thus prepared the bricks are placed upon it with the best edge up, and after that the pavement is smoothed, and then it is ready to receive the application of the cement filler.

In the application of the cement filler the secret of obtaining the quality is that the cement filler shall be made in the proper proportion and that proportion is one to one of the cement and sand. The only way to keep it in that proportion is to keep it in perfect agitation until it lands in its place, and then after it becomes hardened it is uniform in character throughout, and any expansion and contraction which are often called upon to explain is almost eliminated, because that is taken up in compression. But whatever cracking may be taken care of simply by means of an expansion cushion alongside the curb.

As to the curb for a country highway, it is advisable simply to build it flush with the pavement, so the teams can pass on to or off that pavement without rise or hindrance.

As to its quality, after a pavement is thus constructed, it is almost impossible for it to get out of order, and I am almost inclined to refrain from offering the facts with reference to the durability of brick pavements thus constructed. We never have had a brick pavement in this country to call for repairs in twenty years, and that is something worth while that the American people ought to know. I am not an advocate of the use of brick generally and indiscriminately; you must have the sand clay roads, you must have the water bound macadam, you must have the water bound roads as have heard a good deal about. But upon excessively used roads over which would come consistently in almost unlimited numbers motor cars, trucks, farm wagons and autos of all kinds, there is but the one statement that is economical to construct upon such a highway and that is either granite or brick. Of course a granite pavement would be out of the question for brick is not prohibitive in cost for excessively used roads, and it is the solution of the problem as to the material for excessively used highways that the American people demand.

Although I cannot go into details and recite all the evidence of the economic value of brick roads on the excessively used highways of this country, I will state two or three of the advantages. Traction resistance is less than that of any road. It does not originate dust, and a farmer with the utmost comfort can have his house by the side of the highway without the dust flying to his window and yard. You can get about any time of the year. But the chief virtue of that road is that it is never out of repair, and it is good for use night or day, winter or summer, wet or dry.

Admires Pastor Russell's Book.

Atlanta Constitution:—Bill Arp, the "Southern Philosopher," wrote the following review of "The Divine Plan of the Ages" some time before he died:

"It is impossible to read this book without loving the writer and pondering his wonderful solution of the great mysteries that have troubled us all our lives. There is hardly a family to be found that has not lost some loved one who died outside the church—outside the plan of salvation, and, if Calvinism be true, outside of all hope and inside of eternal torment and despair. We smother our feelings and turn away from the horrible picture. We dare not deny the faith of our fathers, and yet can it be possible that the good mother and the wandering child are forever separated?—forever and forever?

"I believe it is the rigidity of these teachings that makes atheists and infidels and skeptics—makes Christians unhappy and brings their gray hairs down in sorrow to the grave—a lost child, a lost soul! * * *

"This wonderful book makes no assertions that are not well sustained by the Scriptures. It is built up stone by stone, and upon every stone is the text, and it becomes a pyramid of God's love, and mercy, and wisdom.

"There is nothing in the Bible that the author denies or doubts, but there are many texts that he throws a flood of light upon that seems to remove from them the dark and gloomy meaning. I see that editors of leading journals and many orthodox ministers of different denominations have endorsed it and have confessed to this new and comforting light that has dawned upon the interpretation of God's Book. Then let every man read and ponder and take comfort, for we are all prisoners of hope. This is an age of advanced thought, and more thinking is done than ever before—men dare to think now. Light—more light—is the watchword."

Whether they are revealing the latest discovery in science, or describing great industrial achievements, or telling of their wanderings in strange corners of the world, or feeling the imagination with rare stories, they are giving Companion readers the best of themselves.

Seven serials at least will be published by The Companion in 1913, and nearly 200 other complete stories in addition to some 50 special contributions, and a treasure box of sketches, anecdotes, expert advice as to athletic sports, ideas for handy devices round the house, and so forth—long hours of companionship with the wise, the adventurous and the entertaining. Diogenes is Dead

And since that venerable old relic evaporated, it has become unfashionable for folks to stalk about with a dark-lantern looking for virtue hid under a bush. In this age of vacuum cleaners, safety razors and Reno divorces, everyone is looking for the shortest cut, and the busy housewife naturally looks to to the advertisements as a guide to her purchases. Instead of personally taking inventory of all the stores in town. I say she does this if you give her a chance. Of course if the local dealer never calls her attention to new additions to his stock, she cannot be blamed for "sending below" for what she wants.

And really it's easier and more profitable to wait on a customer whose mind is already made up—you know.

Another thing: It was not driving necessity, but intelligent advertising, that created the automobile industry, the kitchen cabinet business and a demand for phonographs. It is advertising that makes the beardless youth hanker for piebald sox at four bits a pair, while the two-for-a-quarter black ones used to be good enough. So even though you may be "the trust" in the necessities belonging to your particular line, the possibilities are infinite for creating a demand on the profitable semi-luxuries. -:- -:- -:-
