RIGOROUS SCHOOLING.

He Carried to His Death the Lesson He Learned at Eton.

Dr. Kente, the terrible head master of Eton, encountered one winter morning a small boy crying miserably and asked him what was the matter. The child replied that he was cold. "Cold?" roared Kente. "You must put up with cold, sir! You are not at a girl's school!"

It is a horrid anecdote, and I am kind-hearted enough to wish that Dr. Kente, who was not without his genial moods, had taken the hint to some generous fire (presumably such a thing was to be found) and had warmed his frozen hands and feet. But it so chanced that in that little sniveling boy there lurked a spark of pride and a spark of fire, and both ignited at the rough touch of the master.

He probably stopped crying, and he certainly remembered the sharp appeal to manhood. For fifteen years later, with the Third dragons, he charged at the strongly entrenched Sikhs (30,000 of the best fighting men of the Khans) on the curving banks of the Sutlej. And as the word was given he turned to his superior officer, a fellow Etonian, who was scanning the stout walls and the belching guns. "As old Kente would say, this is no girl's school," he chuckled, and rode to his death on the battlefield of Solomon, which gave Lahore to England—Agnes Repplier in Atlantic.

CORRECTED BY A SENTRY.

The Incident Which Led to Coleridge Retiring From the Army.

In his young days the poet Coleridge had a little love affair which ended in disaster, for the lady refused him. In despair he enlisted in a cavalry regiment, which he hoped would be ordered on foreign service, that he might end his blighted career on the tented field. For family reasons he dropped his correct name, but from a feeling of sentiment retained the initials, so Samuel Taylor Coleridge became Private Silas Tompkins Canterbury.

The regiment did not leave the country, and it was not long before his soul wearied of barracks life and its utter absence of romance. His military life ended in a curious fashion. One day while Coleridge was doing a weary sentry go two officers strolled past. One of them made use of a Greek quotation, which the other corrected. The first insisted on his correctness, while the other was just as positive he was wrong.

While they disputed, the sentry suddenly presented arms and respectfully informed them that they were both in error. He gave the exact quotation, name of the author and other circum-stances. If his master had spoken the hearers could not have been more astonished. The incident led to an inquiry, and the poet was restored to the bosom of his family—Argument.

Bavarian Distances.

In the Bavarian highlands signposts along the roads, instead of stating the number of miles or kilometers to the various villages, give the amount of time which the average pedestrian will supposedly take to traverse the distance. This is merely an official expression of the very general custom of the peasants in the region, who invariably tell inquirers on the roads not how far it is to a place, but how long it takes to get there.

For instance, one asks, "How far is it to Oberammergau?"

"A small half hour," will be the answer, or perhaps "A good half hour" or "A big half hour."

Which is puzzling until the stranger learns that a "small half hour" means twenty-five minutes, "a good half hour" thirty minutes and "a big half hour" thirty-five minutes.

Qualified to Paint Him.

Andrew Patterson, the Australian painter, secured a commission once to paint a very lengthy and wealthy suburbanite. Patterson himself is a lank leech, shooting up beyond six feet one inch. He was rather priding himself on having been given this commission, bearing in mind the great pressure of artists round every possible job in Australia. Eventually, however, the sitter explained, "It was a long time looking for a suitable artist," he said. "I'm six feet two and a half, and I'll be struck you I didn't see a painter who'd 'ad enough 'light to do a full length of me!"—Argument.

Schiller and Goethe.

Schiller was, from all accounts, a much finer man than Goethe, but in mental grasp and artistic power the Sage of Weimar was head and shoulders above his dear friend Schiller. The Germans know this, and while they love Schiller far more than they do Goethe, they are often blind to the fact that the latter was much the greater intellect.—New York American.

Figures Don't Lie.

"Hoax. Men live longer than women. Just that's right. My wife and I were the same age when we were married. But I'm fifty now, and she's just thirty-one!"—Illustrated Bits.

Education.

Education does not consist of knowledge alone. It is the mental capacity of being able to establish and maintain harmony between ourselves and the world.
