

EUROPE TO RECOVER

Foreign Countries Will Rise Rapidly After War

HIGHER WAGES ARE PREDICTED

Europe Will Have Plenty of Money for the Development Regardless of How long the Present War May Last

(Written for the United Press by Henry George, 2600000.)

LONDON, April 11. (U.P. mail)—Europe will rise rapidly from the ashes of war.

Reconstructing the great armies, re-starting the machinery and collecting the threads of commerce will take time, but the spirit of revival will be much greater than ever before.

The belligerent nations everywhere new machinery for making munitions will, mostly, be adapted to developing various manufactures. This will be a great asset.

I question whether labor will ever permit a return of the pre-war low scale of wages in England, France or Germany. I think the standard of labor has been permanently raised throughout Europe. I am very glad of it.

Tremendous impetus has been given to female labor. European women have for years wanted a larger place in the commercial world. They have it. These women will never again occupy dull, uninteresting places in the home. This will increase the supply of labor after the war perhaps 50 per cent.

I think increased production will employ part of this increased supply. The European labor supply at the beginning of the war was greater than the demand. This was the reason for the low wages.

Still I think I am right that wages are permanently raised. I think they will be raised by the power of the Trade Unions.

Europe will, after the war, no matter if it lasts two years more, have enough money to do business. Those who have been living on the interest of their money will suffer most. The rich man who is active can afford to lose his money because he is continually getting more.

It has been the custom for a man to retire from or never enter business, just living on his small or large income, and looking a peevish or baronary. Now he will find it wise and inviting to become a business man who helps produce.

I think society, so often snobbish and unintelligent in its affairs, will break off the harpades of the mid-Victorian period and again look upon work, trade and commerce as praiseworthy rather than pitiable.

England has many beautiful estates with much life around. A great many of these estates will be sold because the owners cannot afford to hold them. These estates had heretofore little will become agricultural ground, used in the real interests of life.

Many young men who had uninteresting posts have joined the army and got a taste of fresh air and sunshine which they will have difficulty in forgetting. These posts must now be made attractive and remunerative.

Probably a large number of these young men will turn to such countries, Canada, Australia, South Africa. The United States will get her large share, but Europe will strive to keep the best men. I don't believe the young man whose hand is full of gold and whose body is full of good red blood will be content to sit in the office of the world before the war.

England is concentrating for the first time in 50 years that population in the most healthy form of activity.

FRUITS OF DESIRE TELLS BIG STORY

In building up the state, I think the form of final settlement of this war will have much to do with possible trading among themselves of the nations now at war.

Many people feel that the public never again will buy a German-made article. Others feel that trading again must begin between Germany and Great Britain after the settlement to a greater or lesser extent depending on the manner in which the final treaty is drawn.

England may adopt a protective tariff, taxing the matter out of politics. Before the war, the sense of protection was nearly dead, but with the new industries springing up there will be a feeling that they should be, at least for a period, protected from foreign competition.

America could manufacture for the European market but has not done so the last year and a half manifested any great desire to do it, or taken any serious steps toward it. With few exceptions, America has not yet again learned the science of export business. It is difficult for a commercial community to develop the intricate export business where the elements of trade are so intricate.

Local politics certainly will make itself a serious export matter after the war than ever before. Much of the old spirit of "let well enough alone" and "letting things go" will have been getting out of business and will have evaporated.

Calvin McGraw, driver of one of the local auto delivery agencies, recently was arrested by Harold Williams for taking an illegal run of the requirements of the traffic ordinance. McGraw was traveling the same way as usual, and was seen by Williams when in traffic which on the left he attempted to get in front of a bus going in the same direction. The ordinance forbids the driver to pass the vehicle in front of the bus, but the report was made by the bus driver.

LOOK AT THE DOUGHNUT NOT AT THE HOLE

Some of the Splendid Achievements of President Wilson

"Look at the doughnut—not at the hole in the center." This maxim when applied to President Wilson means: Look at the solid achievements of his administration—splendid tariff law, an income tax that relieves the masses of one hundred millions of taxation, the best currency law the Nation ever had, two anti-trust laws written upon the principle that "a private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable," thirty peace treaties between the United States and governments exercising authority over three-quarters of the inhabitants of the globe, resistance to the demands of a few investors for intervention in Mexico, and maintenance of neutrality toward the belligerent nations in the European war—these constitute the doughnut. Look at these and you will recognize in them the basis of the claim which the Democratic party makes to continued public confidence.

The hole in the doughnut is made up of errors of which the Republicans can not take advantage because on these subjects the position taken by Republican leaders is worse than the position taken by the President.

"Look at the doughnut and not at the hole in the center."—The Commoner.
