LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Kate Gordon, who after a hasty courtship married the wealthy John Gordon, soon finds that she and her husband do not agree. John's insatiable ambition is to gain power. He loves money only that he may make a showing with it. He delights in paying big bills and in demonstrating to the world his ability as a money winner. In his married life he desires his wife to be a doll, to be strictly his possession, to be paraded before his friends. Altho a free spender he refuses to give his mother or his wife spending money of their own but will pay any bills which they may contract. This leads to deception on the part of the mother but the wife refusing to follow the course set by the mother demands an allowance for herself. She is refused and a misunderstanding arises. John's actions with Bess Moreland a former sweetheart at last leads to an accident in which Kate is seriously injured considerable publicity resulting. John however, continues his affair with Bess until a fight results with Karl Shepard his best friend who secretly is in love with Kate. She decides to leave John and after selling some of her jewelry to her sister-in-law Alice, she goes to Atlantic City where she is saved from committing suicide by Karl Shepard who arrives at the opportune moment. Shortly afterwards she is visited by her mother and a former suitor, Charles who has been a foster son to the mother since the death of Kate's father. While in Atlantic City, Kate's mother dies suddenly. Kate finds she has been left a large enough income to make her independent and appoints Charles as her agent in spite of the objection of her husband.

THE BATTLE OF THE SEXES

"Perhaps I am, Charles," I said, when he told me that I was looking for something in marriage that could not be found on this earth. "Perhaps, I am," I reiterated, "but whatever I find, I am not going to let cowardice and inertia wreck my life as it has done that of so many other women that I know. In looking for what I have suggested to you I may find a substitute. I may find something else which will make life endurable, but I am not going to be unhappy while I pretend to be something else. Since we have been married John has never changed the course of his life, the course of his actions, the course of his thought, by one iota, and yet he would change me in every particular.

Liked Her Independence.

"Do you realize, Charles, that by no possibility would John Gordon have fallen in love with me had I been other than I am. He liked my independence. Why, before we were married he used to thoroughly enjoy discussions of almost any subject with me and I will say that he showed a respect for my mental powers that made me feel that he regarded me quite as his equal. We were comrades and companions, but immediately upon our marriage I became only a possession, and he began to make me over into something that he would have despised after he had finished the transformation."

Charles looked at me in great surprise. "Katherine," he said, "do other women feel as you do?"

"A majority of them do," I said. "There are women, like John's sister of phlegmatic temperaments, who go on in tranquility, marking out new avenues of interest for themselves and keeping their own lives separate from the life that they live with their husband. There are other women whose sole comfort and hope is in their children. These women are like Ruth Gaylord. I think that Ruth is happier now that she is separated from Bobbie than she was before. There is still another class like Helen. A woman of this class is so desperately in love with her husband that she is willing to become slave or a plaything, just as he wishes. This type of a woman is never happy, no more so than I, although John satisfies all my primitive emotions, he outrages my feminine ego every moment I am with him.

Reason for Unhappiness.

"Either the woman of today has grown too large a brain or man has not yet learned that femininity is something more than one of his ribs. One or the other of these is the reason for many unhappy marriages."

"All of which," said Charles with a smile, "gets us nowhere in particular. I seem to recall that we started for that oil gusher in Texas at least you had us on our way."

"I beg your pardon, Charles, I wasn't thinking of starting for Texas, I was thinking only of your going."

"Well, of course, I will go if you send me," he said, "for when was the time that I did not do your bidding since you were old enough to audibly bid."

I laughed. "Am I such a tyrant," I asked. "Do you, too, Charles, think that I want my own way to the exclusion of everything else? Am I one of those exigent females who always want to be right?"

"No," answered Charles slowly, "but I think you want your full share of it business. If I may criticize, Katherine, I will say that perhaps you were not clever enough to keep this fact from the sex lords of creation."

Sudden Light Breaks.

"Oh," I said, a sudden light breaking in on me, "then the trouble with me is that I am too frank, too sincere. Perhaps you are right, Charles. The more I think of it the more I think you are right, but alas I must be frank with myself and sincere with my husband." I said this with unadmitted quaking of my heart, because I knew that what Charles had said was true. If I could just act as though I believed everything he said and did was right I could do anything I wished to do.

"I allowed him to think that he was doing things his own way, he would be perfectly content. In other words, if I had treated him as his mother did, when she arranged with the shopkeepers to put overcharges on his bill and give her the money; or as did Elizabeth Moreland when she made him think that he was still the only man in her life while she was carrying on two or three other flirtations, I would probably be a more peaceful, if not contented, man.

As it was, I was fighting the eternal battle of the sexes in my own way, and in my own way I could fight until the end. What the end would be I could not see.

BACK FROM CONVENTION

Earl and Harry Burr, who have been attending the convention of Ford dealers have returned to Roseburg. They studied the latest models of assembly and repair and also investigated new machines that are being put out to simplify the task of working with Ford cars. Mr. Lockwood who has taken over the Ford agency has ordered some of these machines which will be installed in the repair department as soon as they arrive.

O. & C. Grant Lands Are Sold Yesterday

O. and C. grant lands to the amount of $27,000 was sold at the United States land office in this city yesterday. All of the timber land sold was located in the northern part of Lane county. The largest purchaser was the Stevens-Ferris Lumber Company, of Walton, Oregon. Others were John P. Van Orsdol, of Mable, Oregon, and Ray Swenson of Venita, Oregon. All of the purchasers are actively engaged in the lumbering business at the present time, and purchased the timber with the view of converting it into lumber for commercial purposes at once.

The land office still report that inquiries to the extent of about 100 a day, continue to come in, in addition to the large number of ex-service men who crowd the office at all times.

Mrs. F. L. Johnson arrived in Roseburg yesterday afternoon from Grants Pass and will visit here for a few days with friends. Mrs. Johnson came off the purpose of attending a party given at the home of Mrs. S. E. Wall this afternoon. She formerly resided in this city, and formerly resided in this city.
