Beauties of Oregon Vividly Described

The teachers of the English class in the Marshfield high school gave the class fifteen minutes to compose and write a short essay on "The Beauties of Oregon." The following is one of the "prize winners," written by a student recently from Maine:

"Slowly we glided o'er the glassy waters of that beautiful stream, which in Oregon is called a 'slough.' On either side of us stretched the broad and beautiful meadows of marsh land from which issued the delicate perfume of skunk cabbage and hydrogen sulphide. Far away in the hazy distance we beheld the forests in all their native splendor; the tall and stately stumps, some gray and some black, and others reclining gracefully on the ground.

"As we proceeded up the stream we came in sight of one of the fertile farms with its cozy buildings. We could see perhaps a dozen slender, wiry and red cows diligently searching for fodder. Two of the creatures had been more fortunate than their sisters and had come unexpectedly upon a clump of snail grass about two feet in diameter, but quickly surmised cows! They did not bow their heads in peace and thankfulness and share the food. Instead there ensued a battle terrible to behold, and I turned my eyes away in dismay.

"The dwelling was constructed of a dry goods box, but we were too far away to discern whether it was a Sears Roebuck and Co. box or a Montgomery Ward and Co. box. Three long-necked chickens gazed at us curiously, and we caught sight of the sturdy farmer coming from the barn with a cup of milk, singing, 'Oh, Happy Day.' From somewhere in the distance the song of a crane intermingled with his."

Dies Suddenly of Heart Failure

Capt. Edward P. Hagan, a well known resident of the Soldiers Home, was taken suddenly ill with heart failure while in the office of Judge I. B. Riddle late yesterday afternoon and died before he could be gotten to his home. "Cap" Hagan resided with his wife in one of the small cottages adjacent to the home and was a familiar figure on the streets of the city. He was seemingly in good health yesterday, the attack of heart failure coming upon him suddenly as he was paying his lodge dues to Judge I. B. Riddle, secretary of the B. P. O. Elks. Dr. Stewart was called and the old gentleman placed upon a stretcher and taken to the home, but passed away before he was taken from the stretcher.

Capt. Hagan was a member of Co. F, First New York cavalry, and was a native of New York. He was 75 years of age and entered the home from Jackson county in June, 1914. No funeral arrangements have been made as yet.

"Cap," as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, had resided at the Soldiers Home for some time and was one of the most popular members of the institution. He appeared quite often on programs given by the Women's Relief Corps and the G. A. R. and was quite adept at handling baseballs, which he juggled with much ease. He was a likeable pal and a true Elk, and his loss will be deeply mourned by his many friends in this city.

Daughter of One of Earliest Settlers Tells Story of Events of this County

IS WELL KNOWN WRITER

In Spite of Advanced Age Is Taking Course in Journalism and Story Writing at the University of Oregon.

A story of unusual interest to Douglas County residents recently appeared under the name of Fred Lockley, the well known writer. The story deals with the life of Ada Bradley Millican, well known in this city and known as the oldest student at the University of Oregon. She is a writer of nationwide repute and recently visited in Roseburg on her way from New York where she was feted by some of the largest literary clubs of the country. She is a niece of F. M. Good of Cleveland and was one of the early residents of the county. The story as written by Mr. Lockley follows:

"The University of Oregon has many interesting students, not the least interesting of whom is Ada Bradley Millican. She is taking the course in journalism. "I enjoy my work as a student very much" said Mrs. Millican. "I am studying magazine writing under Professor Julia Burgess, technic of poetry under Professor Bates, and news writing under Professor Thatcher. When in 1885 I went with Mrs. George Melvin Miller, who used to be Lucien M. Cogswell to see the corner stone of Villard hall laid I had no idea that I should ever be a student of the University of Oregon. It certainly takes me back to the old days with some of my classmates here — as talking with Helene Kuykendall a day or so ago. I went to school with her grandfather and her grandmother. Her grandmother Ada Alvson and her grandfather Dr. Wm Kuykendall were classmates of mine at Wilbur seodemy. Her grandmother and I were in the same class in drawing and she married our star pupil, Will Kuykendall. How old am I? That's not a fair question. Just say that I am the oldest pupil attending the university. I was attending school at Walla Walla when the news of Lincoln's death reached us, and I can never forget how my father grieved over it.

"I often run across one of my old schoolmates who lived next door to us at Walla Walla. They were Bohemians. I thought the little boy, who was about my age, was awfully nice. His name was Johnny Swadlenacht. His father died and his mother married a preacher named Horner, and little Johnny took the name of his stepfather and became Johnny Horner. He teaches history at the Oregon Agricultural College. Johnny and I went to school together. Our teacher was Professor Moore, whose brother Miles C. Moore became governor of Washington territory. Professor Moore ruled by love and by giving reward of merit cards.

"My father, K. W. Bradley, came to Oregon in 1852. My mother, Elizabeth Pierce, came in 1851. Father took up the first donation land claim in Coles valley in Umpqua county. Doctor Cole came shortly after, and as he had a family the valley was called after him. Father taught the first school in that district, in a log school house with earth floor and oiled paper windows. The children sat on homemade, backless benches, that is all but one pupil. She had the seat of honor, a rock that my father had found and rolled into the schoolhouse. It had a natural depression that formed a seat. Elizabeth Pierce, the oldest pupil, who was 14 years old occupied this honor seat. She had to stop school after the first term to assume the duties of a home maker. Father was 25 and she was nearly 15. Shortly after their marriage they went to California, where father went in with J. B. Stowell, who had married his sister and who had a dairy ranch near Tomapais bay.

"A grizzly bear visited our ranch every few nights killing on each of his visits a dairy cow. Father and Mr. Stowell decided that if they did not want to go out of the dairy business they would have to put the bear out of business. They called the neighbors together and organized a bear hunt. They found him. Father shot him. The bear went into some thick brush. Father followed him. The bear awaited his coming and knocked him down, breaking several of my father's ribs. Father pretended to be dead. The bear took one mouthful from my father's arm, tearing the muscle away. Father stayed 'dead.' The bear nosed him and snuffed him and finally left him. The rest of the men, who had run away, came back and killed the bear and carried father home.

"It was in the shock that this occurrence gave my mother that I was born. When I was a month old and when father's chewed arm and broken ribs permitted him to travel, we quit the dairy business and returned to Coles valley. From there we moved to Albany, where my father farmed until the spring of 1861. While we were at Albany my sister Ella, who has come down from Roseville and is now staying with me, was born. I was then three years old.

"We drove by team to Walla Walla in the spring of 1861. About the only thing I remember of the trip was that while we were camped on Wild Horse creek, near the present town of Pendleton the teams of several campers beside us were stolen during the night. Our dog set up such a clamor that our team was not taken. Father did freighting from Walla Walla to Wallula for several years. When I was eight we drove to Wallula and took the steamer for Portland. Mother and we children came to live with Grandmother Pierce in Coles valley, while father remained for a year at Walla Walla. All the time we had lived at Walla Walla our house had been the rendezvous for traveling Methodist ministers. You see, we raised lots of chickens, and mother was a good cook. When father rejoined us he told us he had been ordained a Methodist minister. I was very far from a minister's daughter. I was a tomboy, and rode horseback roaming all over the country. They made me go to school again. The teacher was John Booth, the son of Rev. Booth and brother of R. A. Booth of the Booth Kelley Lumber Company. I went to school at Cleveland four miles from Coles Valley and by the way my uncle F. M. Good is still postmaster at Cleveland. He has been postmaster there for more than 50 years, being the oldest postmaster in point of continuous service in the United States.

"When I was 12 I went to Wilbur academy. Professor Herron was principal and his wife was one of the teachers. I got as far as what you would now consider the fourth grade. I didn't get a chance to go to school longer, as I had to stop and go to teaching school. I have always wanted to continue my studies so that is why I am now at the late university. During the past 30 years or so I have had time to see how valuable an asset an education is, and what pleasure one gets in the possession of knowledge.
