LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

THE COMING WOMAN.

"Do you mean to tell me, Alice," I said, for the moment forgetting my own affairs in the newness of her, "that you are going to vote if you get a chance?"

"Why, of course, my dear. It will be my duty to vote. And let me tell you a great secret. When women have a little more experience they will take more interest and know more about what they are voting for than does the average man. Women, when they really get going in politics, will have another standard of feminine beauty."

"Up until now the standard of beauty in women has been youth, for unconsciously back in the minds of men there is always utilitarian motive behind beauty of any kind. Nature has given us one great privilege, the privilege of bearing children, and man has made the period in which we could bear them the only period in which we might be called beautiful."

"I recall that not long ago I witnessed what was called the victory convention of the suffragists. There was hardly a woman there under 40, and yet among them some of the most beautiful women I have ever seen."

Something for Her Country.

"In the future, Katherine, when a woman reaches what the novelist calls the 'dangerous age,' she will not go 'kind of batty,' as Tom calls it, and dress herself in the gewgaws of youth and try to hold on a little longer to the admiration of men, but she will look forward serenely and happily to doing something of worth and to achieve something for her sex and her country. We are always being told how much the suffragist can do for her country, but it seems to me that merely making women citizens, merely giving them something to do after their children have flown the nest, merely giving them a feeling of being some use in the world after they are 40 or 50, is the greatest thing that has been given to our sex since it was turned out of the Garden of Eden and told that forever after would rest upon it the age-worn accusation, 'the woman temptress.'"

"If men will only realize this they will be much happier. They seem to think that if a woman has brains she is undesirable, and they never will admit that brains and beauty can be embodied in one woman."

"I looked at Alice. 'Tom must have learned that fact,' I said."

"Yes," she answered, "but what do you think my husband says to me about it? In a burst of confidence one night he said, 'Alice, you are so beautiful that I love you in spite of your brains, and that's the man's attitude, my dear, the world over.'"

Most Important of All.

"I am afraid," I said, "that I shall never be a new woman. I fight at present the fact of John's love for me and my love for John seems much more important than anything else in the world."

"But, don't you understand, my dear Catherine, that John can love you and you can love John over if you are a woman who has some interest in other affairs of life?"

"I might love John, but you know your brother well enough to know that John couldn't love me, if he thought that I knew enough to manage my own affairs. He has never allowed me to talk to him about business in any way. When I have asked him the least important question about his work—and sometimes I have asked the question only for the sake of making conversation—he has shut me up with a supercilious smile while he said, 'My dear, it wouldn't interest you. Why bother your pretty head about it?'"

"And yet I have heard that same brother of mine," said Alice, "go in to the minutest details of one of his advertising campaigns with his stenographer."

"I smiled. 'Of course, you realize, Alice,' I said, "that John's stenographer is tall, singular, awkward, cross-eyed, gray-haired, and 45."

"That may have something to do with it," said Alice musingly. "I don't remember ever seeing a man dining with his stenographer, if by any chance that description would fit her."

Very Fragile Possession.

"All of which, Alice, brings me back to my own affairs. John doesn't want me to be anything but a possession, a very fragile, lovely possession, perhaps, but something that absolutely belongs to him nevertheless. I am not happy at being that, and I do not think that I have the strength of character to be happy if he only treated me as Tom does you, as a pal and comrade. You see this transition age of woman is a very unhappy one for most of us. I confess I would have liked to have lived years ago, when women knew of no other life, except that of being possessed by some man, a father perhaps until he gave her to her husband; or it might be that I should be happy in 1920, when women were the equal of men in all the affairs of life and in this great thing, which we call love, will not be of man's life a thing apart and woman's whole existence."

Bad Check Artist Wanted In Eugene

Sheriff George Quine has received notice to watch for a bad check artist who makes a specialty of passing $45 checks on drug stores and who has been operating quite successfully in Eugene this week. The man has generally called up the store on the telephone, ordered an outfit of supplies, and then come in a few hours afterwards to offer a bogus check in the sum of $45. Because of a mistake in a name the checks were apprehended in Eugene and a general warning sent out to the various police officials of the state.

Uniform Abused By Ex-Soldiers

Recently there has appeared in the western states a team of discharged soldiers who, after fighting in the recent war to uphold the dignity and principles of our flag and the United States uniform, insist upon belittling and desecrating the uniform by wearing it to arouse the sympathy of the public in general to the purchase of unofficial and fake pamphlets, magazines, etc.

In a majority of instances it has been found that the men wearing the uniform for peddling, hawking and panhandling on the streets and from door to door, are not bona fide soldiers but are using this popular taste nefarious advantage of popular sentiment. This practice is in direct violation of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, and subjects the offender to punishment by fine of $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both.

The real American soldier is absolutely and positively opposed to the use of the uniform for commercial purposes, because the sight of a soldier peddling, panhandling, canvassing or soliciting in uniform creates the fallacious impression that he has been neglected and is obliged to resort to the public through the patriotic appeal of his uniform, to make a living. As one ex-service man puts it:

"There are crooks and crooks, but about the meanest crook of them all is the crook who disguises himself as a soldier and, under cover of the glorious uniform, or even an imitation of it, swindles the patriotic with various unworthy money-making schemes."

The war and navy departments are opposed to any such misuse of the uniform; the American Legion is opposed to it; the public should not encourage it.

No Increase In License Required

No increase in auto license fees is required in order to pay the interest and principal of all state highway bonds that can be issued under the proposed four per cent limitation. The present road bonding limit is two per cent of the assessed value of property in the state. The increase is necessary in order to make it possible to complete the main state highways within the next few years, instead of waiting indefinitely for their completion from annual revenues. By issuing the bonds, the roads can be provided for use while the auto license fees and gas tax are being paid.

Mrs. J. E. Zimmerman left this morning for Eugene to visit with friends and relatives for a short time.
