

ELECTION, MAY 21 STATE ROADS Vote 302 X Yes For 4% State Road Bond Limit

BALLOT TITLE IS AS FOLLOWS:
302 X Yes
303 No
CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—Related to the people by the Legislative Assembly.
LIMITATION OF FOUR PER CENT STATE INDEBTEDNESS FOR PERMANENT ROADS.—Purpose: To amend section 7 of Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Oregon so as to permit the creation of debt and liabilities including previous indebtedness for the purpose of building and maintaining permanent roads to the amount of four per cent of the assessed valuation of all the property in the State of Oregon, instead of two per cent as now provided by law.

NO PROPERTY TAX—NO DIRECT TAX NO INCREASE IN AUTO LICENSE FEES NO INCREASE OF GASOLINE TAX

Keep these three facts in mind. The present auto license fees and gasoline tax will pay both the principal and interest on all the bonds under this amendment, and will yield an annual surplus besides for other state highway work. No additional taxation of any kind.

FEDERAL FUNDS MUST BE MATCHED

Oregon must have sufficient Highway Funds to match Federal apportionments or Oregon cannot get the benefit of Federal money for Oregon Roads. Increasing this constitutional limit is a necessity. Unless limit is increased, either state roads cannot be completed for many years, or must be financed by direct property taxation. This measure averts direct property tax for state highways and makes early completion possible. Let's get the roads built now.

Income from Present Sources Sufficient to Pay Principal and Interest.

The best that revenue from auto license fees and gasoline tax, without increase of present rates, will amount to is only about one-third of the amount needed to pay the principal and interest on the bonds. It is proved that an increase of 4% in the present rate for auto license fees and gas tax will reduce principal and interest and give a surplus of $1,000,000.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

A CONTRAST IN LETTERS.

I read the stanzas over and over, who would have thought that Karl Shepard, so full of fun and seemingly unsentimental, would have written these verses.

"Truly," I said to myself, "there are anonymous letters and anonymous letters," and then it came to me with a suddenness for which I could not account that after all perhaps the anonymous letters that I knew were written by Elizabeth Moreland would not be more apt to poison my future life than these beautiful stanzas, which I knew had been penned for my eyes alone by Karl Shepard. Karl seemed to think that because he was thousands of miles away from me he might write me anything he chose, provided he left me no chance of being able to answer. I thought I understood his mind perfectly.

He did not consider it dishonorable to tell me he loved me when we were so far from each other, and as he particularly made it impossible for me to answer in any way his call from across the world. It was really the highest form of selfishness after all and he was going to revel in my day dreams, even if he had to put the land and sea between us.

I knew Karl Shepard well enough to know he would never have written me that poem had he been within a few miles of me or to the same town, but by some peculiar sophistry he had made himself believe there was no harm in sending it to me, situated as we now were. He never thought for one moment what those little verses might mean to me, how they might color my life and my actions and my thoughts; how they might bring unhappiness to me.

An Anchor to Windward.
Thank God! I had an anchor to the windward in the coming of my baby! And as I thought of that for the first time, I realized that after all everything was for the best, because I was not sure that if I had received these stanzas without this anchor of motherhood I might have tried to find the man who could tell his love so beautifully.

We are queer creatures, we women; such little things away us and the things of which we ought not to take the slightest account seem to change our whole outlook on life.

I believe I could forgive John's flirtations with Elizabeth Moreland more easily than I can his constant littleness in regard to money. And yet I, too, began to take account of my income. If, as John figured, I was no longer a woman worth a half million dollars, yet I had the tiny income that my mother left me, and this old house in which I am living. That is enough for my modest wants, but I am sure if John finds that I am not rich any more he will never forgive me because he bought the house without consulting me. I was more than ever confirmed in this idea, as during the morning I received Charlie's looked-for letter, in which he explained that the big gusher seemed to be going dry, that it was only running about 10 per cent of its former capacity.

Suspected Crooked Work.
He said no one about the fields could understand it and he felt as though there were some crooked work going on, although he had not found it. Of course, I couldn't understand how anyone could do anything to stop the flowing of a well, but I supposed, of course, that Charlie knows more about these things than I.

Soon after Charlie's letter I received a long night telegram from John in which he guardedly referred to crooked work.

"It's a good thing I came down here," he said; "I will show up these crooks before I get through."

As usual, the communication contained no particular thought of me. I wonder if I am foolish and unreasonable to expect that when John even sends me a telegram he would put the one word "love" in at the end. In sudden thought I counted the words in his night letter and found that he had just fifty.

"He had not room for the word 'love,'" I said to myself a little bitterly.

Slowly I took out the little poem and laid it beside the telegram on the table. One man was fighting for my material success, fighting for money that might be mine, and the other had sent me a graceful little tribute in which he voiced his longing into words:

Ab, but Love, were this thought certain,
Could my sacred dreams come true.
All eternity I would give for
Just one moment filled with you.

I smiled to myself as I thought that probably almost every other woman in the world would put the stanza beside the telegram and in weighing the two would find that the poetry outweighed the business telegram a thousand to one. And yet if John would let me love him, if he would just give my starved heart a chance, I would care more for him than anybody or anything in all this world.

Temperance Union Has Meeting

The Women's Christian Temperance Union presented a program of great interest to a large number of members and friends at the home of Mrs. A. C. Marsters Wednesday afternoon. Hon. B. L. Eddy gave a talk on the measures to be voted on at the election May 21. The W. C. T. U. as an organization emphasizes the necessity of an intelligent participation in affairs affecting the well being of the community, and after the talk passed a resolution endorsing the millage bill for the relief of the schools of higher education. The program which followed consisted of two vocal solos by Mrs. Wm. Hiney accompanied by Mrs. R. M. Hume, and a piano solo by Miss Hazel Hinkle. Mrs. I. M. Tushill, of Sutherlin, who is the county president of the organization, gave an inspiring talk on the present work of the union and urged the members not to relax their vigilance in aiding every movement for the betterment of the community and state, and reminded them that the work of the union extends to the nation and the world. The afternoon closed with a delightful social hour, with a dainty lunch served by the hostess, Mrs. A. C. Marsters, assisted by Mrs. J. R. Bailey.
