BRAND BACK FROM EDUCATION MEETING

Matters Affecting the Course of Study in Journalistic Departments Discussed.

STUDENTS ARE TRAINED

Agricultural College Gives Students in Other Lines of Work Training in Journalism to Enable Them to Gain Publicity Advantage, to Understand Publicity.

"I just got back last night from Corvallis and Eugene where we have been having a series of meetings of the state board of higher curricula."

and C. A. Brand, while in this city yesterday attending the carnival. The board has been making a visit of inspection to both institutions for consultation about matters affecting the course of study and especially regarding the school of journalism at the University and the department of industrial journalism at the Agricultural College.

"The school of journalism at the University of Oregon, which is preparing young men and women to become newspaper writers, editors and managers, in fact giving them training in journalistic work of all kinds, ranks among the three strongest schools of journalism in the country and is doing work of which the state may well be proud. Its graduates are filling important positions on newspapers of this and other states."

"The work in industrial journalism at the agricultural college is to train students to write and edit material on various subjects embraced within its distinctive field, such as agriculture, engineering, forestry, mining, home economics and the like; to enable them to appreciate the point of view and co-operate effectively with the editors of farm and trade journals, to conduct campus publications and other publications of a technical nature and to furnish scientific material in popular and understandable form to the papers. This, as is evident, is not a course in journalism in the broad sense, such a course not falling within the scope of the agricultural college. The college's great interest is in fitting those whose life work is to be in other fields,—of industry, trade, science or agriculture,—to take the places of leadership through the press as well as otherwise for which their technical training fits them.

"These courses at Corvallis are intended to meet the needs of a large group of persons, farmers, county agents, home demonstration agents, field specialists in the extension service, research specialists in the agricultural experiment stations, teachers of industrial subjects and others who may have occasion to prepare material for the press on industrial subjects."

"Both the great state institutions have been working in closest co-operation in the campaign for the passage of the millage measure and great deliberations were held on Monday by the students of both to celebrate the victory which means so much to the young people of every part of the state and to the state itself."

A GAIN OF THIRTY POUNDS REPORTED BY SEATTLE WOMAN

"I have not only gained thirty pounds in weight, but I am enjoying so much better health than I have in years I feel just like a new person," said Mrs. Rosa Harris, 444 Twenty-sixth Ave. North Seattle, Wash., recently. Continuing, she said:

"For the three years past I suffered so much from stomach trouble and had become so run down, that I had given up hope of ever getting any better. My appetite was extremely poor, and I had to force down every mouthful I ate, and most of the time I could not even retain this, I would become so badly nauseated. The least little thing I ate would sour, gas would form and press against my lungs so badly, I was all I could do to get my breath, and I would have such intense cramping pains in my stomach they would nearly kill me. I was also badly constipated and had to take some sort of laxative almost every day. My kidneys bothered me a great deal and I suffered with pains across the small of my back, and in fact, had pains all through my body nearly all the time. My head ached so bad nearly all the time I thought it would burst wide open and at times I would become so dizzy I would have to grab hold of something to keep from falling, and I would feel just like I was going to faint and black spots would dance before my eyes. I was so nervous the least little thing would upset me, and at night I was so restless I could not get a little sleep, as I would roll and come to some side of the bed to the other all night long, and in the morning I would feel so tired and exhausted I was all I could do to get out of bed. I lost weight so rapidly I soon became so weak I could not do my housework, it being all I could do to get about at all."

"I had seen so much about the good Tanlac was doing others, and, too, so many of my friends had praised it so highly I decided to try it. Well, as I had given up all hope of ever finding anything that would help me, you can imagine my surprise when I began to get better as soon as I had taken only a few doses of Tanlac. My appetite improved until it was soon better than it had ever been, and nothing I ate gave me a particle of trouble afterward. I continued eating it until I was soon rid of all my troubles. I am never bothered with pains in my stomach or back, and, in fact, never have a pain of any kind. I never have the headaches or those dizzy spells any more and have regained my strength until I can do all my housework with ease. I can truthfully say I believe Tanlac saved my life and I expect to praise it as long as I live."

Tanlac is sold in Roseburg by W. P. Chapman, and by the leading druggist in every town.

RECORD APPLE CROP.

WINCHESTER, Va., May 28.—A record apple crop is indicated in the Shenandoah-Cumberland district, extending 215 miles from Staunton, Va., to Harrisburg, Pa., which has approximately 3,000,000 bearing trees. Weather conditions during the winter and spring were more favorable than in several years, say frost growers. No damage from frost has been reported and the blooms have set well. The district, according to federal horticulturists, is one of the most important apple producing sections of the country.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE

SOME MODERN IDEAS.

"What's the matter, Miss Katherine, darling?" said Hannah, as she opened my door and came in and took me up in her arms just as she used to do when I was a little girl. "You haven't quarreled with that handsome husband of yours, have you?"

"I don't know whether I have or not," I answered somewhat incoherently. "Well, I just saw him going out of the gate stamping down the walk with a grip in each hand and I came up here and find you sobbing your heart out. It looks as if something were the matter."

"There is something the matter, Hannah, but I don't just know what it is. When John is away from me and I sit down and think about him he seems to be everything in the world that I could possibly wish for and I believe that's just the way he thinks of me when he thinks of me at all. But the moment we come together we seem mutually disappointed with each other. For instance when John came in on the train—you know I went to meet him in my blue skirt and shirt waist and the long blue silk mitered coat—I expect I was a little drugged out."

"I hadn't put a bit of rouge on for weeks and John was so disappointed with my looks that he didn't even offer to kiss me. I came home, got into this negligee, dressed up, and he seemed to like me again, but as usual we began to talk about money. Why, do you know, Hannah, the only subjects John and I can talk on are my appearance and money, and we never agree on either. John seems to think I should be beautiful and bright and gay and happy under any circumstances. He can never conceive of a condition that should ruffle me physically or mentally. And just at present, Hannah, I am really very human. I want to be petted a little, even if I am not looking my best."

"Were you disappointed in Mr. John's appearance when he stepped off the train?" Hannah asked deliberately.

"Well, I've seen him when he looked better. He was unshaven and his linen was soiled, but of course, Hannah, you know he had been traveling for a couple of nights."

"Yes, my dear, I know that, but you have some excuse, too, for not looking your best. I may be an old maid, Miss Katherine, but it's from choice, and one of the reasons I have never married is because of all this silly talk among men, and even among women, that if a woman wants to keep a man's love she must always be in dress parade. How many times have you seen in the newspapers that a woman should not wear curl papers at the breakfast table, and yet did you ever see it written that a man should not come in his shirt sleeves, unshaven and without a collar to his own table? I never did. Some time ago the newspapers carried a report of a prominent woman writer, who, tho married, lived in a separate home from her husband to keep their love free from the commonplaces that mar many marriages. I think her idea was good."

"Trim and Puritanical." I looked at Hannah in surprise. I hadn't dreamed that she held such ideas on the marriage question. She was so prim and puritanical, and I knew she had been my mother's friend as well as servant for at least forty years. I expected to hear from her the most mid-Victorian ideas and here she was giving me a taste of the radicalism of the most modern feminist.

"Do you really think, Hannah," I said, "that this woman has solved the problem of how to be happy tho married?"

"Why, I'm sure, honey. Why do you ask me that? The only people I've ever seen at close range that were married were your own dear father and mother and they were very happy, but you know your father was such an invalid and he so dependent on your mother that the affection between them and that more than of mother and child than husband and wife. But certainly, either you are in an unfortunate circle of friends, my dear Katherine, or the modern marriage leaves much to be desired in the way of happiness."

"Well, you see, Hannah, it's because women are in a state of transition. We are trying to emerge from that condition of 'belonging,' that was the condition of the wife of other days, and men have not quite realized that we want to be considered something more than a possessed property. I think that makes all the trouble. The reason father and mother were so happy was because he never did consider mother a possession."

"Don't Cry, Honey." "Well, don't cry, honey. I believe if I were married to a man"—I looked at Hannah's gaunt form and wrinkled face and smiled to myself, for you see that I, too, had the old idea that a woman must be unpossessed to hold her husband's love—"what would you do if you were married to a man who thought you must be 'dolled up' all the time?" I interrupted.

"Tomorrow," Hannah's Ideas on Husbands."
