HANNAH'S IDEAS ON HUSBANDS

"Well, answered Hannah, when I asked her what she would do if she were married to a man who insisted that she be 'dolled up' all the time, 'I think that I would say to him, 'It's fifty-fifty. You must never show yourself to me without your coat—you must never rest your feet in disreputable slippers—you must never go unshaven and you must always dress for dinner however much you have been working all day.'"

"I interrupted Hannah with a laugh, for I knew but one man who could live up to that and that was my cousin Charlie.

"I think I'll ask Charlie to dinner tonight, Hannah. I know you prepared a nice one for John and I don't feel very much like eating, so it would be a shame to have all your nice food go to waste."

Shortcake for Dinner.

"I'd do that if I were you, Miss Katherine. It would cheer you up, and we're going to have strawberry shortcake, and you know how your cousin used to love to come over here when your mother had strawberry shortcake."

"Yes, ever since I can remember Charlie was invited over to mother's to help eat the first strawberry shortcake we had, but what excuse will I make, Hannah, about John's leaving so suddenly?"

"You needn't make any excuse—you can't tell me that Mr. Goodwin hasn't lived long enough with Mr. Gordon not to have taken his measure. He will probably understand immediately that something came up that made it imperative for Mr. John to go back to business—at least that's the impression he will give you. And if you will play up to it everything will go all right."

"All right, Hannah," I said wearily, for I thought to myself how tired I was of continually playing up to somebody or something. "I think," Hannah, "I will lie down for a little while so as to be in perfect trim for Charlie and that strawberry shortcake."

"I would if I were you, dearie. And just let me give you some comfort; as you grow older, my dear child, you will come to understand that, after all, these things that seem so terrible to you now are simply part of life and don't matter much."

Pulls Down the Shades.

All the while Hannah had been saying this she was fixing the cushion behind my head on the divan. Then she pulled down the shades and went out the door softly.

I closed my eyes but I could not sleep. I wondered if Hannah were right. Were these things which I thought so important at this moment only something which my youth and condition magnified into lugubrious?

I grew slightly drowsy, and yet I am sure I was awake, and again I had that vision that had come to me before. Again I saw that queer old boat floating down the Nile—although this time instead of it being moonlight and so vivid was the illusion that I felt the heat coming waves and enveloping me. Stretched out under an awning on the deck clothed in cool white linen was Karl Shepard. I could see that he was not asleep and yet his mind seemed partly quiescent. Presently he stirred and clapped his hands. A picturesque clothed servant came at his bidding. He murmured some words that I could not hear and the man brought him paper, pen and ink.

I was sure that Karl was writing me another letter and it really brought me a great deal of comfort. I did not stop to think of anything else except that somewhere on this earth there was a man who was thinking about me. I tried very hard to see what Karl was writing, but I could not make out the words. He would write a few sentences and then stop as though he were thinking very intently.

Had Grown Thinner.

I was somewhat shocked at his face. He had grown much thinner—it seemed to me that he was not well. I began to wish that there was some way of my communicating with him. I would like to tell him how foolish it was to sentence himself to this loneliness just for the sake of an unobtainable woman and then I remembered a little speech that he had once made at a dinner table at which the guests had all smiled, thinking that it was one of Karl Shepard's epigrams that he made to interest people by their cleverness and not caring whether they were impressed with their truth. I think it was the last dinner we all attended together when Karl said: "It is only the unobtainable women that one always desires."

LERRY ON THE JOB.

Charles Lerry has the true carnival spirit. He was on the job every minute of the time today during the parades and dispensed soda and candy free of charge to the parhelpants. Lerry believes in rewarding those who have assisted in putting the festival over the top and certainly exemplified the proper spirit in being the first to "treat the gang."

Olcott Commended For Proclamation

Secretary of Agriculture Meredith, in appreciation of Governor Olcott's proclamation on forest protection week, has just written him a letter of thanks. May 23 to 29 is being observed throughout Oregon and Washington as a drive against forest fires.

The secretary's letter reads: "Your proclamation of the week of May 23-29 as a time for bringing home to the people of Oregon the importance of better protection of forests against fire and the responsibilities of the individual and the community in this matter, is an action to which I am glad to give my hearty endorsement. I trust you will allow me to extend my congratulations to you on having taken this step, and my earnest good wishes for the successful carrying out of so noble-spirited a movement."

"The matter of making adequate provision for the safeguarding and renewal of our forests is of vital importance to the nation. Our decreasing timber and paper supplies are beginning to make clear to all the need for concerted action; and the scales and the nation must join hands in the effort to halt forest destruction."

"No only as sources of permanent supplies of timber but also as conservators of water supplies, our forests are essential to our industrial, economic, and social welfare. Fire is their arch enemy. If we substitute that enemy—and we can if we will—we will save our forests to the benefit of the people for all time."

Very sincerely yours,
"Signed) E. T. MEREDITH, Secretary."

WHAT TO DO ABOUT SUGAR.

The only thing that tends to make the sugar situation less formidable is the discovery that the public actually holds in its hands an effective weapon against all kinds of high prices. Not only do the people possess the weapon, but they have apparently acquired the willingness to use it, says the Spokesman-Review.

The fruit canners who have announced that they are no longer in the market for sugar represent the public in that they foresee a slow market for their products if the price of the latter are based on 22 or 23 cent sugar. From what happened in other lines of business they deduce that they would lose by putting up canned fruits and preserves that nobody would buy. So like sensible business men they have decided to have it out with the sugar interests before the canning season begins.

Other sugar-using industries will have to follow suit sooner or later. Further increases in the retail price of candy, or cakes, or sweetened drinks, are sure to cut down consumption. Careful buying is becoming more general. The people are wearing overalls in spirit, as the

New York Sun puts it, if not in fact. The state of affairs with regard to sugar ought to show instantly the effect of restricted buying. There is enough sugar for ordinary purposes. Once let the speculators in control of the market understand that they may be left with an oversupply when the American beet sugar crop comes on the market next fall and prices will tumble quickly enough.

WOODSON MADDOX PROMOTED.

A letter received by Mrs. B. W. Maddox from her son, Woodson, who is with the aviation service of the regular army, contains the information that he has successfully passed the examination for first class sergeant. He was among 228 taking the examination, only six being successful. He was third in the list of those attaining a passing grade. He expects soon to take the examination for aviation mechanic and if this is passed he will receive a monthly salary of $98.

SIX MONTHS I COULD NOT WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Me Strong and Able to Work—I Recommend It To All My Friends.

Bayonne, N. J.—"I had pains in back and legs so that I could not stand caused by female trouble. I felt so tired all the time, had bad headaches, and for six months I could not work. I was treated by a physician and took other remedies but got no relief. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me very much. I am well and strong and now able to do my work. I cannot thank you enough and I recommend your medicine to my friends who are sick."

"Mrs. SUSIE SACATANSKY, 25 East 17th St., Bayonne, N. J.

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for over forty years, and today hold a record for such wonderful success as does Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and treated with standard and dependable by every thinking person.

SON'S LETTER TO HIS DEAD FATHER.

(This letter appeared in Commerce and Finance, a New York publication, with the statement that it was designed to promote a better understanding between living fathers and their sons, and was read by Charles H. Howard, of St. Louis, at a bi-weekly luncheon of the chamber of commerce recently).

Dear Dad: I am writing this to you, though you have been dead 30 years.

I feel I must say some things to you, things I didn't know when I was a boy in your house, and things I was too stupid to say.

It is only now, after passing thru the long hard school of years, only now, when my own hair is gray, that I understand how you felt.

I must have been a bitter trial to you. I believed my own petty wisdom, and I know now how ridiculous it was, compared to that calm, ripe, wholesome wisdom of yours.

Most of all, I want to confess my worst sin against you. It was the feeling I had that you "did not understand."

When I look back over it now, I know that you did understand. You understood me better than I did myself. Your wisdom flowed around me like the ocean around an island.

And how patient you were with me! How full of long suffering and kindness!

And how pathetic, it now comes home to me, were your efforts to get close to me, to win my confidence, to be my pal.

I wouldn't let you. I couldn't. What was it that held me aloof? I didn't know. But it is tragic—that wall that rises between a boy and his father, and their frantic attempts to see through it and climb over it.

I wish you were here now, across the table from me, just for an hour, so that I could tell you how these 30 years have gone. I understand you now, dad, and God, how I love you, and wish I could go back and be your boy again.

I know now how I could make you happy every day. I know how you felt.

It took a good many years for this prodigal son—and all sons are in a measure prodigal—to come to himself. I've come. I see it all now.

I know what a rich and priceless thing, and one least understood, is that mighty love and tenderness and craving to help which a father feels toward his boy. For I have a boy of my own.

And it is he that makes me want to go back to you, get down on my knees to you and ask you to hear me, dad, and believe me.
