Mexican Border Prove Mecca For Thirsty Americans, Plenty to Drink.

SUCKING EGGS TRIED

Many Ingenious Devices Found to Circumvent American Restriction on Intoxicants—Straw Proves to be an Ally.

How a thirsty inhabitant of these United States may obtain a drink from our more or less amiable neighbor on the south, is told in the June Popular Mechanics in an interesting manner by John Edwin Hogg, who seems to know all the ins and outs and the little tricks resorted to along the Mexican border by hunters of the old-fashioned, high-voltage liquor.

If one is thirsty and takes a trip to the Pacific coast, it is only necessary to buy a ticket over the newest of our transcontinental railroads—and ride in a buffet car part of the way. Then, too, the train makes stops at convenient points along the route where passengers may step off and put one foot on a brass rail to exchange American money for any sort of wet goods to be found in a well-stocked American cellar. This railroad dips into Mexico in two different places, and the buffet car, which travels in bond through the United States, is open for business as soon as the southern boundary is passed.

Of course, bringing liquor out of Mexico for future use in the United States is contrary to law, but Americans who are thirsty are likewise ingenious. A favorite passenger's method that has thus far defied the vigilance of the federal authorities is that of railroading the stuff with the aid of a Mexican accomplice. There are usually a lot of poverty-stricken peons hanging around the Mexican railroad stations to whom Uncle Sam's dollars speak with a loud voice. As the train is about to start he hangs a jug or bottle inside the trucks of a Pullman car, or otherwise conceals it about the train. Later when the train stops at some way station in the United States, perhaps well over into Arizona or Texas, and far from the gaze of border officials, the passenger steps out. He snags a jug or bottle from the train, and a little party is put on in the Pullman smoker. Then, too, pints and half pints fit very nicely into Pullman car water coolers, ventilators, and other numerous hiding places about the average transcontinental train, and even if a customs officer happens to find them it is rather difficult to say just who put them there. That hot-water bottles and ice-bags are also handy prohibition-dodging containers is indicated by the fact that the druggists in the border towns declare they are no longer able to keep this kind of goods in stock.

Prohibition is the least of the worries of Americans living along the Mexican border.

An American has but to sally up to one of the fences that separate the United States and Mexico. The government has erected heavy barbed wire structures on the line at all the points of entry, but they do not completely close the border by any means. A Mexican on the lookout for this kind of business, produces the desired bottle, holds it close to the fence, and hands the American a straw. The straw is again passed through the fence, but this time the end that is in Mexico goes into the neck of the bottle, and the end that is in the United States goes into the American's mouth. The rules of the game are that the American exhales before going into action then he shuts his eyes and sucks up as much liquor as he is able to swallow without taking another breath. For sanitary reasons, many Americans carry their own rubber tubes for this form of prohibition dodging, but the Mexicans limit the size that may be used to one-eighth of an inch interior diameter.

The Mexicans also sell eggs thru the international fence, and several grown-up men standing on the American side suck them! As a matter of fact the eggs are only shells, the contents of which have been removed and replaced with whiskey, gin, wine, or other varieties of alcoholic cheer. The eggshells, after being filled with liquor, are soaked with paraffin, and the dry customer after buying one has only to pick off the seal and help himself to the thirst-quenching contents.

W. E. Naylor, of Eugene, drove a government truck to this city yesterday. Mr. Naylor is employed with the forest service and is located in the Eugene office. The truck brought to this city is to be used by the local office in hauling supplies for the work of the department here.

On Way to Roseburg—According to word received in this city, A. C. Scholes and wife, of Hemlock, Calif., are on their way to Roseburg by auto to make their home here. Mr. Scholes is an instructor in vocal music and will probably open a studio in this city. He intends to purchase a small farm in the immediate vicinity of Roseburg. Mr. and Mrs. Scholes are now at Piedmont, Calif., and are endeavoring to make arrangements to secure sufficient gasoline for their car to enable them to reach this city.

Will Repair The Suspension Bridge

Extensive repairs are to be made to the North Umpqua suspension bridge in the forest reserve this month and a crew of men under Deputy Supervisor G. A. Bonebrake will leave this city about the middle of the month to start the work. The bridge was put in ten years ago and since that time has had no repairs made. The engineers constructing the bridge were forced to rush the job and used freed fir timber in its building. It will probably be found necessary to rebuild two of the towers as the cables are slightly out of line, but only repair work will be done this summer. As soon as the bridge is put in proper condition to stand the travel over it, the workmen will endeavor to secure sufficient cedar timber to rebuild the sections which must be replaced and it will probably be found necessary to float the logs down the river several miles to the bridge. The timber will be cut and allowed to season before being put into the bridge and it is believed that it will need no more attention for a number of years. This is one of the largest suspension bridges maintained by the forest service.

USES RED SWEATER.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 5.—Georgia Friedman, 19-year-old school girl of Deenhaven, a summer resort at Lake Minnetonka, recently saved her life by flagging a speeding trolley car with her red sweater after her foot caught in the "frog" of a switch.

The girl was on her way to school when the heel of her shoe jammed in the "frog" as she crossed the tracks. In face of the speeding car, which was coming toward her at a rate of 50 miles an hour, she tore off her red sweater and waved it as a danger signal.

The motorman stopped the car a few inches from the girl. When all was over and her foot freed from the rail, she collapsed.

GUESS THE CENSUS.

Guesses of every size and description as to the population of Roseburg soon to be shown by the 1920 census figures are pouring into the census editor of the News-Review. Some are overly optimistic and not a few are quite pessimistic but all are entitled to their private opinion and it remains to be seen who will come the closest in their estimate. To the person guessing the closest to the population of the metropolis of Douglas county the News-Review will give a year's subscription. What's your guess? Send it in at once to the census editor. You may have the right hunch.

PORTLAND APPRECIATES OFFER

The following editorial comment taken from the Portland Journal: Roseburg is offering Portland roses by the carload for the festival. Could there be a finer state spirit? May Portland appreciate it, and in return be as considerate of Roseburg and, by the same token, why not a similar cordiality and mutual helpfulness between the metropolis and all up-state cities?

Interesting Data of First Convention

(By Associated Press.) CHICAGO, June 7.—At the first republican national convention held in Chicago 60 years ago:

An Iowa delegate walked 150 miles to get to a railroad to come to the convention.

Special railroad rates were made and Chicago's population probably doubled in convention week.

Hotel rooms were $1.50 to $2.50 a day. Crowds were so great that billiard tables in the hotels were pressed in service as beds.

The "Wigwam" in which the convention was held was probably about the size of the annex to the Coliseum, which this year's convention takes place. The wigwam's profuse decoration was largely furnished by the republican women of Chicago. They were invited to come "armed and equipped with those formidable weapons, needles, thimbles, scissors, etc., etc."

When a special train pulled in with the Massachusetts and other New England delegates, rockets were sent up and a cannon boomed to announce their arrival to awaiting friends. The gallery in the convention hall was reserved for women and their escorts. Because of the great number of men unable to get in, one man was reported trying to get into the gallery with an Indian squaw selling moccasins as his credentials, but was excluded on the ground that she was so lardy.

The two chief nominating speeches were made in less than 30 words. Abraham Lincoln was placed in nomination in 26 words.

The making of the presidential nomination was announced to the city by the firing of a cannon placed on the roof of the convention hall.

That night cannon and rockets were fired, bonfires lighted, and multitudinous parades formed, their participants carrying anything that would serve—even to rakes and fishing poles.

The foregoing data was obtained from the library of the Chicago Historical society, which has various relics of the convention and campaign that followed.
