FLOAT WANTED AT ROSE FESTIVAL

Roseburg Is Requested to Send Floral Float For Festival In Portland.

FLOWERS FOR HOTELS

Endeavoring to Make Arrangements to Send Box of Fresh Flowers to Portland Each Day to Distribute Among Guests.

A request for Roseburg to participate in the Portland Rose Festival by entering a floral float to advertise Roseburg roses, has been received from Eric V. Hauser. Because of the present condition of the Chamber of Commerce which at the present time is in a state of hibernation it is quite doubtful if anything in this regard is done. The proposed plan of distributing roses to the visitors passing through this city has already been up and will probably be put over successfully. It is planned to make a big rose exhibit at the depot grounds and pass out large bouquets to each person passing through Roseburg.

An effort is being made to provide flowers for free distribution to eastern guests at Portland through the hotels. Mr. Weaver of the Umpqua hotel, while in Portland recently made arrangements for the distribution of roses through the hotel association, the plan calling for the shipment of a box of fresh flowers from this city each evening. The expense of shipping the flowers is now the important factor and a movement is on foot to provide the funds for this purpose.

The distribution of flowers is believed to be one of the best systems of advertising possible for the city and the merchants and residents are very anxious to see it successfully carried out.

The letter received from Mr. Hauser, president of the Portland Rose Festival, follows:

Mr. R. L. Whipple, City Recorder,
Roseburg, Oregon.
My Dear Mr. Whipple:

Very nice publicity has been given by the press in the last day or two over the generous offer of the good people of Roseburg to ship a few carloads of roses to Portland for the Rose Festival. In view of the fact that an abundance of roses is assured now, without the necessity of shipping them in, it has been suggested by some of the Shriners that your people would like to meet the Shrine trains, of which there will be a large number, and present the Shrine visitors with luxuriant bouquets of roses.

It is also the very earnest desire of the Rose Festival directors that Roseburg make a floral entry in our Grand Floral Parade on June 24th. Splendid response has been made by many cities in Oregon, and while it is true that advertising is restricted in the Floral Parade, publicity of a very fine character would be given to an entry in our parade from Roseburg, and the cost of making such an entry need not be excessive. California is making a beautiful floral entry in the parade this year, and many cities in Oregon and Washington, and both Victoria and Vancouver, B. C., are making entries.

Please let me know if we may anticipate an entry from Roseburg.

With kind regards and best wishes, I remain Very truly yours,
ERIC V. HAUSER.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE
by the noted author

JOHN COMES.

I made no comment on what Ruth told me. Instead I said, "Bring the children over to see Mary."

"Oh, you are going to call her Mary?" asked Ruth, looking up eagerly.

"Yes, if I did not love the name I could hardly call her anything else, as you know what a joy she would have been to mother if she had lived to see her."

"I love the name of 'Mary,'" said Ruth, "and am so glad you decided that should be her name. I must run along now; your nurse has been hovering around reproachfully a long time."

"I am going to let Mrs. Gordon sit up for a few minutes tonight," said the nurse as she took little Mary from Ruth's arms and put her in her bassinet.

"What a lovely bassinet!" Ruth exclaimed.

"Yes, Helen sent it to me," I added, before I thought.

Ruth made no comment, and I was very sorry I had referred to it.

"Good-bye dear. They tell me John will be here in the morning," she said at parting.

"Yes, he just telephoned, I believe."

"Is he going to stay long enough so that you can go back with him?"

"Oh, I do not think so. He is very busy just now."

Lifted Into Chair.

The nurse lifted me into the big chair which she brought close to my bed. I did not realize I was so weak. "Here, drink this," she said as she held something pungent to my lips.

"I am all right," I asserted faintly. "Bring me the baby."

"No, Mrs. Gordon, you must just sit very quietly until I get your bed fixed and then you can take her when you are back."

In less than ten minutes I was back on the pillow, and it felt mighty good to get back into bed after the first few moments in a chair.

I think I was asleep almost before she put Mary in my arms, and I did not know when she took her from me. It seemed but a moment before I opened my eyes and it was broad day. I heard John's voice in the hall. "Isn't Katherine awake yet?"

"Yes, dear, I am awake," I called, and John came in and picked me up bodily in his arms. I put my arms about his neck and raised my lips to his.

"Here! here! no tears," he exclaimed, and I tried to explain I was crying because he was there.

"What do you think of that, nurse? This woman cries when she sees her husband."

He laid me back again among the pillows. "They tell me you have been very ill, Katherine, but I do not believe them. Why, girl, I never saw you looking better in my life. You are a little thinner, but that is becoming, and your color is fine."

Clasps His Hand.

I felt his cool hand against my hot cheek and raised my hand up to clasp it. "Oh, John, I am so glad you are here," I said. "I wanted you every minute." To my surprise, I knew that the involuntary assertion was the truth. I had wanted him and had been hurt that he was not with me.

"Well, I am here now, girl, and I am very sorry that I was not here before. It was very stupid of me not to have left my itinerary with my secretary. You see, I did not intend to go over to Scott's country place when I left the office, but I did not find him at the factory. When I telephoned him he asked me to come out and we would transact our business there.

"You know my one-track mind, don't you, Katherine? I intended to send a telegram to the office telling them where I was going, but I had to rush to catch the boat which goes up to Scott's house and I must confess I forgot all about it.

"When I got up there, Scott insisted that I should stay until Tuesday and as I had to get his business I stayed. You will forgive me, will you not, sweetheart, this time? I have not forgiven myself for it yet, and if anything had happened to you, dear, I never would have forgiven myself."

John was talking fast, and I was perfectly happy to listen. I began, however, to wonder if he were going to ask about the baby. To my surprise he seemed embarrassed.

Nurse Goes on Errand.

"I sent the nurse out of the room on an errand. "You know, dear," he said as soon as she was out of earshot, "that I never for a moment thought you would be sick so soon. I thought when you telegraphed me that you were just calling me back to make up.

"But this will be a lesson to me. I will never put my own construction on your words again."

"Let's not talk about it any more, John."

"You bet we will not. I want to see my daughter; where is little Mary Elizabeth?"

I felt my lips draw across by teeth as I answered: "Your daughter Mary is over there in that bassinet."
