

Explains Reason Filters Not Opened

Editor News-Review: Referring to the article in your issue of the 26th inst., headed, "Council Denied Look at the Filter," the manager of the Douglas County Light & Water Co. wishes to state that he walked to his office with a member of the council Tuesday morning, and although various matters pertaining to the water system were discussed the councilman never mentioned the fact that they were on their way to inspect the filters. Had the committee taken the matter up in the manner in which they afterwards stated they should have done, permission would readily have been granted them.

We are willing at any reasonable time to show the filters or reservoirs to anyone interested, but the right is conceded to no one to go to the plant and order any employee to open up the plant for inspection. I was only too glad to accompany Dr. Shoemaker to the plant yesterday morning where the filter was inspected and found properly filled and in perfect condition.

We have nothing to cover up or conceal and are willing at all times to give proper consideration to all complaints and do everything possible to supply pure water and good service to the public.

DOUGLAS COUNTY LIGHT & WATER CO., By R. M. Jennings, Manager.

Emery Manager Sutherland Plant

Loyal V. Emery, of Colby Valley, has accepted a position as manager of the Oregon Growers' plant at Sutherland recently purchased from the Sutherland Fruit Products company. Mr. Emery, who has been with the Oregon Growers since the formation of that organization, is one of the leading fruit growers of the county and is thoroughly familiar with the business. As manager of the Sutherland plant he will be in a position to serve the company well and will doubtless prove to be a very efficient employee. He is well and favorably known throughout the entire Umpqua Valley and is one of the largest producers of this section. The Oregon Growers' Co-operative association has selected his trade name. The principal name to be used is Mistland. A second name which will be used on some of its products, especially on dried and canned goods, is Finland, and a third name that will be used is Trust West. These names are now being registered. California has capitalized the sun. Northwestern fruits are of superior quality, due to a happy combination of soil and climate. In every valley of Oregon, especially in the spring and fall, this drive down banks of fog and mist veils and banks of fog and mist drive down against the hills. It is a scene that every Oregonian is familiar with. Oregonians are often afraid to mention the fact that they have a little rain and mist occasionally. This mist, however, is one of the greatest assets of the country west of the Cascades and contributes to its richness, its great output, and the high quality of its fruits. Hence Mistland seems to be a very appropriate name.

Within 24 hours after the rain stopped on the morning of July 14, cracked cherries were being pitted and dried by the Oregon Growers' Co-operative association at the rate of ten tons a day. A cherry pitter was installed at the dryer of Geo. W. Weeks, 2 1/2 miles north of Salem, and operations started. A day later a dryer of F. E. Evans was also in operation to handle the overflow.

Cracked cherries have been hauled from all parts of the Salem district, as well as from Amity. At least 100 tons will probably be saved from total loss by pitting and drying them.

NEW ROCK UNCOVERED.

Relative to another temporary shut down of the Beaver Portland Cement factory at Gold Hill, the News of that town says: "Owing to difficulty in getting out rock at the Zacher quarry it was considered more profitable to uncover another quarry in the same locality at the bankers at Zacher. So the plant was shut down pending the delivery of more rock. So much earth is in the way to make rock work profitable at the quarry a location where the rock lies more exposed is being opened and the plant will again receive an abundance of rock in about ten days. In the mean time the men employed at the plant are receiving plenty of time to get their vacationing all in."

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

CLEVER ELIZABETH.

"I think we are going to be very happy in our new home, Katherine," said John.

"I hope so," I answered.

"Don't you believe so? Katherine—do you not care for someone else, do you?"

I looked up with a smile. "Yes, dear, I care for someone else very much."

"Don't say that Katherine. I know that Karl Shepard has written you letters that appealed to your romantic soul; but, dear, he is just a man like myself, and I do not think he has played the game fairly. He was my best friend, you know."

"Poor John, I could not keep him in suspense any longer. My hand stole into his and I said, "Why, John I am not in love with Karl Shepard the least little bit."

"It is not your cousin, Charles," he interrupted.

"No it is not Cousin Charles unless you count the saterly affection that I hold for him."

"Sisterly affection—pooh. I'll hold my own against any man you want to be a sister to. Who is it? Who is my rival?"

"Well," and I deliberately hesitated, "I put her to sleep about half an hour ago, John."

Puts Arm About Her.

John impulsively put his arm around me and pulled me to him, although we were in the motor where all the world might see. "Katherine, he said, "don't torture me even in fun."

From the emotion in his voice I knew that I was still playing the same. He was being thrilled to his finger tips, and although he did not know it, I was using the same marked cards every woman holds in her hand and has held since the time of Eve—a little flirtatious hypocrisy, a good deal of subtle flattery, and a seemingly sincere even while holding ones self aloof.

John looked down in my face in way that made me feel that he was gazing at me with new eyes. I was fitting with my husband and he liked it.

He returned to the subject of Karl Shepard. This time he was magnanimous in analyzing what he was pleased to call "Karl's infatuation." "Poor old Karl," I did not know until the other evening when he returned to the city, that Karl had been disappointed in his love for Elizabeth.

It was like a dash of cold water, for I knew that poor, old, underling John had shown my Karl Shepard letters to Elizabeth Moreland, and they had discussed them, and Elizabeth had tried to minimize his love for me by making John think that it was a passing emotion worked up to make him forget the great love of his life, which, I could see from John's manner she had intimidated was hers.

Admires Her Cleverness.

Involuntarily I drew away from John's arms. But all the while I could not help but admire the cleverness of Elizabeth Moreland, as I guessed now how much more dangerous she was because of her cleverness.

Elizabeth Moreland had never analyzed me for a man's weakness or a man's gullibility, and so had never done so at all. I found now that from John's unconscious remark that there was at least one man whom she knew better than I, and that man was my husband. She played upon every possible string of John's reasoning ability, and played it well. I had not had sense enough in the beginning to do the same thing, but again I resolved to do it and to do it better than she.

"Why are you drawing away from me?" asked John reproachfully.

"Surely you are not foolish enough to think that you are the only love of Karl Shepard's life?"

"No," I answered. "Neither do I think that every man who pays me compliments or pays me the ordinary courtesies of everyday life, is in love with me."

"Oh, you women! You women! Why are you so hard upon each other?"

"I am not hard on any other woman, John. But don't you think we have had enough of other men and women who really mean nothing to us. Let's talk about the new home, dear, and our own affairs." And I gave myself a little inward pat as I thought "Match that Elizabeth Moreland how I hated all this hypocrisy, this silly appealing entirely to the sex principle, but I had entered into the strife and I would keep up the good fight until I knew whether my husband belonged to me or some other or to me."

Hides on in Silence.

John rode on in silence and I knew that he did not realize that he had told me that Elizabeth Moreland had seen Karl Shepard's letters. He was fatuously repeating to himself what all men hold most true, that what a woman doesn't know doesn't worry her, which of course is true if they could keep it from her. In some way the woman always does know intuitively. Through the ages she has learned to differentiate the false from the true and she worries not because she knows what is true or false; but over what she suspects the man is keeping from her.

50 Years Ago

A young man who practiced medicine in a rural district became famous and was called in consultation in many towns and cities because of his success in the treatment of disease. This was Dr. Pierce who afterward moved to Buffalo, N. Y. He made up his mind to place some of his medicines before the public, and he put up what he called his "Favorite Prescription," and placed it with the druggists in every state in the Union.

For fifty years Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has sold more largely throughout the United States than any other medicine of like character. It's the testimony of thousands of women that it has benefited or entirely eradicated such distressing ailments as women are prone to. It is now sold by druggists in tablet form as well as liquid.

ASTORIA, OREGON.—"I saw Doctor Pierce's advertisement and as I had tried so many things for woman's trouble without getting any help, I decided to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and I did so with good results. I think it is just great."—Mrs. D. Braz.

MARRIED YESTERDAY.

Mr. George G. Puckett and Miss Verna Way, both young people of Myrtle Creek, were united in marriage at 4:30 Wednesday afternoon. The ceremony took place at the parsonage of the Christian church and was performed by Rev. C. H. Hill-ton. The young folks were accompanied by several of their relatives and friends. They left on the 4:20 train for Myrtle Creek where they will make their home. Mr. Puckett is a logger and Miss Way is a teacher. The happy couple have many good wishes of their friends.
