Car Shortage Checks Movement of Wheat

TOPEKA, Kan., July 29—An increase in the number of cars made available for the shipment of wheat to market is affording some relief to Kansas farmers in the problem of marketing their grain according to state officials and bankers interested in the wheat movement.

Although there are not yet enough cars to move all the wheat, and many cars promised by the interstate commerce commission have not arrived, and railroad officials are unable to give any definite assurance as to when they will arrive, the car shortage is not so desperate now as it has been in past years.

Officials of the state board of agriculture estimate that there are yet stored on Kansas farms 22,000,000 bushels of last year's wheat crop, and an additional 8,000,000 bushels of last years wheat in Kansas elevators. A perceptible movement of this "hold over crop" is now reported by the state board of agriculture.

There remains, however, the vastly greater problem of moving this year's wheat crop, variously estimated at 110,000,000 to 135,000,000 in bushels to the great milling and export centers.

Bankers are vitally concerned in the wheat movement problem. According to J. R. Anspaugh, secretary of the Kansas State Bankers Association, bankers have $65,000,000 tied up in loans on crops which await the marketing. Many of these loans are long over due, and the prospects are that the amount involved in crop loans will easily reach $100,000,000 with the ripening of the present wheat crop.

Some relief has been obtained, Mr. Anspaugh said, from the recent announcement of the Federal Reserve board that it favored extension of corn loans, and the fact that the Federal Reserve banks had been authorized to accept wheat paper from the member banks or from other banks through correspondents.

Railroad officials have warned the farmers of their inability to move the new wheat crop promptly and urged them to hold it on their farms properly stacked or in bins.

Homesteader Tires Bet With Uncle Sam

Tiring of the isolation of a homestead away back on the head waters of the Umpqua river, Pat Fiser, whose brogue indicates that he is anything but a Frenchman, has abandoned his claim and will again seek the convenial associations of the railroad men, among whom he has worked since he was 15 years old. Pat came into the News-Review this morning stating that he wanted to advertise a truck for sale and then he proceeded to enumerate the qualifications of a pair of big mules that he purchased when he went into the homestead business, but he found that the only thing on earth that he could use those mules for was for packing in "grub." The balance of the time the mules rested, and so did Pat, and he alleges that he lost 25 pounds in weight while cursed in that occupation out there in the wilds, so he determined that he would cancel his arrangement with the government for a piece of isolated land in the mountains and get back to a switchman's job where he could have the pleasure of a human being to speak to once a week Uncle Sam has lost a homesteader, that is plain, but the railroads also have another available man in sight by the transaction. Fiver insisted that there is plenty of deer, timber, and scenery out where his homestead is located, but for him the railroad job looked best.

JOHN'S LATEST MOVE.

"What is the matter, Katherine?" Alice asked jumping forward and putting her arms around me, as I swayed a little.

"Nothing, dear, nothing, I answered, and straightened as though to meet the greatest blow I had ever had in my life.

"Yes there is dear, I know there is something terrible the matter. Is Karl Shepard dead?"

"No, no, this telegram does not in any way relate to Karl Shepard. If you will excuse me, dear, I think that I will go to my room. I'll have to be alone a little while.'

"But you must tell me, Katherine. I want to help you dear. You can not be alone in such trouble as you seem to be in now."

"Oh, yes I can dear. Trouble and grief always call for solitude," and I turned away toward my room.

Alice followed me. "It may seem an intrusion to you, Katherine, but I cannot allow you to go to your room. Let me telephone John."

"No, he is the last person I want to see,' I said impetuously.

"What has he been doing now?" asked Alice quickly, as we entered my room.

"I don't understand how he could do it," I said more to myself than to her.

"What has he done Katherine?"

"He has sold my childhood home—the gift of my parents—without my knowledge."

"But he couldn't do that," affirmed Alice. "You would have to sign the deeds and things, wouldn't you?"

Telegram From Charles.

"I thought so, but here is a telegram from Charles Goodwin which says:'Do not be distressed over any thing you may hear. I heard John wished to sell the old place and am again having the deeds made out in your name, harlest'."

"I am going to telephone to Tom and ask him to come right over," said Alice decisively.

"No, don't do that. There may be some mistake. Let me think. Let me think. Surely John would not sell the house without my knowledge" And then all at once it came to me. A little while before during John's management of my oil lands I had given him unlimited power of attorney, and while I had been travelling down here, he had evidently gone back and tried to sell my family home.

Of course he did not know that Charles had bought it. Now, I knew, however, why he had been so anxious to get me into the new house and why he seemed perfectly willing to buy anything I wanted to put into it.

"Let's get John here," said Alice, "I hate to come to the conclusion that the meanest man in all the world is my brother."

"No, don't call him. I know he has done this. He wanted me to give him the last little nest egg I had left from the oil wells and I would not do it. He thinks he has a right to dispose of my property as he wishes. I think, too, that he has the legal right to do this, as I have given him my power of attorney. I am sure that his excuse will be that he did not have money enough to make the next payment on the house, and that he thought he would not bother me with any of the details concerning it. You know, dear, what he told Tom when he tried to borrow some money to make the next payment."

"Oh, dear," exclaimed Alice, "I wish now that I had told Tom to lend it to him.

"Well, it is all over now. I am glad that if my mother's home had to go, Charles has it."

Deeds in Her Name.

"But Charles said that the deeds are made out in your name,' said Alice.

"Do you think, Alice, that I would allow Charles Goodwin, who has loved me since I was a child to give me something that my husband has deliberately taken away from me?"

"No, you couldn't do that, she said. "Oh, what a mess John has made of it. I can not understand his ideas on the subject of money, when it belongs, or should be given to the women folks of his family. He is scrupulously honest with business men and in business transactions."

"I think Alice, I could forgive him for this affair with Elizabeth Moreland easier than I can forgive him for what he has done to me now."

"Oh, my dear, he has never had a real affair with Elizabeth Moreland.

"Yes, he has.'

"How do you know?"

"How does any woman know. I know that no woman could have the effrontery to treat John Gordon's wife as Elizabeth Moreltn dhas theated me unless she knew that she was more to him than I, and wanted him to know."

Tomorrow—Elizabeth Moreland's Letter.

School Funds to Be Distributed

SALEM, Or., July 28.—School funds of the state aggregating $432,267.88, based on a per capita of $2.02 for the 213,994 persons of school age in Oregon, today were apportioned among the various counties by O. P. Hoff, state treasurer. The total apportioned for 1920 shows an increase of $23,522.53 over that of 1919. In 1919 the per capita was $1.95, while at the time of making the apportionment in 1918 the per capita was $1.83.

There is now in the irreducible school fund of the state a total of $6,656,974.40, which includes loans, certificates of sale and cash on hand. The number of persons of school age in the state increased 4381 during the year, according to the state treasurer's report.

HUNGRY FOR GASOLINE

A tourist visiting in this city today "got lost in the fog" when he discovered his gasoline tank failed to register a sufficient quantity of "the elixir of life" to carry him more than a few miles beyond the city limits. Ascertaining the location of the Standard Oil works he immediately steamed up and got in touch with the local manager, B. L. Tyland, who informed him that as far as gasoline was concerned, the premises were as dry as an oasis in mid-summer, whereupon the tourist insisted that he be accomodated regardless of the fact and almost frothed at the mouth in pressing his demands. Finally he drew from his pocket a crisp five dollar bill and tendered it to Bernie in lieu of two gallons of gas—which he did not get—and everlastingly lambasted old John D. and his corps of lieutenants for not being able to supply his wants—even at the price of $2.50 per gallon. If the old fellow had "kept his head," and not gotten excited, he probably would have been accomodated.

Myrtle Point Road To Get Gravel

COQUILLE, Ore., July 28—County Judge Wade yesterday received a letter from the state highway commission in answer to recent petitions by the county court with reference to the Coquille Myrtle Point road, and also from Myrtle Point to the Douglas county line.

The decision of the commission is not altogether clear as to just what is intended, although it seems that it has granted the petition and request of the court, as far as the letter can be made out. The letter is as follows:

"I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 20th and to advise you that your letter of July 3rd addressed to the state highway commission reached me in Portland and the matter was referred to the members of the commission.

"It was brought up for consideration at the meeting held in Portland on July 20th, and the secretary was instructed to advise you as follows:

"That the commission considers the section of the Coos-Douglas highway between Coquille and Myrtle Point to be of sufficient importance to warrant the paving of it when the funds are available, and to advise you that it was the policy of the commission to continue the grading and gravel or macadam surfacing of the entire Coos-Douglas project when completed, and that the engineer has been instructed to advertise for gravelling or macadamizing that part of the highway between Coquille and Myrtle Point which is now graded to standard width and now ready for surfacing and such parts as may be made ready this year.

"The commission at a previous meeting instructed the engineer to advertise for gravel surfacing the section now under contract for grading between Remote and Camas valley, as soon as the grading contract is sufficiently advanced to permit the beginning of the surfacing contract."

Secretary, Oregon State Highway Commission.
