ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

"Commercial rivalry, political differences and minor irritations, inevitable between two progressive peoples of strong character must never be allowed to divide our two nations, who fundamentally belong to the same type of civilization and to the same code of principles," says Philip Gibbs, keenest, most sensitive and most admired in America of all the English war correspondents. In an article on "Ideals and Disillusions" in the current Harper's he explains several things puzzling to Americans. He says that far from working for imperial aggrandizement under the term of "mandate," nine out of ten Englishmen are "aghast at the new responsibilities which we have undertaken, and would relinquish many of them, especially in Asia, with a sense of profound relief." "We have been saddled with new and perilous burdens by the ambition of certain statesmen who have earned the bitter animosity of the great body of the British people which is entirely out of sympathy with the imperialistic ideals." He says about Ireland: "The average citizen of the United States, even if he were uninfluenced by Irish-American propaganda, believes that England was treating Ireland stupidly and unjustly—to which I answered that the majority of English people agreed with that view, though realizing the difficulty of satisfying Ireland by any measure short of absolute independence and separation." In this Irish matter, apparently, England is in that unenviable position once defined by an American statesman as "facing a condition, not a theory." Mr. Gibbs concludes his illuminating discussion in this fashion: "Most of the so-called hostility between England and America is the mere froth of foul-mouthed men, on both sides, and the rest of it is due to the ignorance of the masses. We must get to know each other, as the Americans in Europe have learned to know us and to like us, and as all of us who have crossed the Atlantic the other way about have learned to know and like the American people. For the sake of the future of the world and all the hopes of humanity we must get to the heart of each other, and establish a lasting and unbreakable friendship. It is only folly that will prevent us."

SAVING BY OWNING.

"Mrs. Jones bought an electric washing machine and saved enough on of her household allowance each month to meet all the payments. She was surprised to find she could do it. It gave her an idea. She had gone into debt to save, just as she went into debt to buy. She has signed up under our Go into Debt and Save plan, and is saving and investing $25 a month."

This is not an advertisement for washing machines or any other labor savers. It happens to be the ad of an old established brokerage house which deals with conservative securities. It is an indication, however, of the number of women who are buying such labor-savers on the installment plan and making them pay for themselves.

"John won't buy a house until he can pay cash for it," said one woman rather wistfully to a couple who had just bought a home "on a shoestring." "John was brought up with a horror of debt. I suppose it's all right, too, yet you people seem to get things paid for."

"Buying a home isn't going into debt," replied the others. "It's making an investment."

It will be a long and weary time until John has cash to buy a home with. Meantime he pays rent and Mary puts up with untold inconveniences.

There is a clear distinction between buying things of a fairly permanent value on a time payment system and buying perishable things beyond one's means. There is one simple question whose answer will decide whether one ought to contract to buy any object for which he cannot pay cash: "Will this object last and give satisfaction long enough after the debt is paid to make it worth while?"

Well-built homes or typewriters, good pianos, sound securities, all answer the question with yes. Jewels sometimes do. Clothes which cannot be paid for in less than sixty days invariably answer no. Flimsy furniture which will come to pieces before the bill is paid says no roundly and forcibly. Sound, substantial objects of long-time usefulness are not debt but saving. Short-lived things bought on time become dead horses. It is a wise family that wisely goes in debt to save.

"DECEIVED" MINE WRECKERS.

Herr Stinnes, the German coal king, returned from the Spa conference saying, "we have been strangled and deceived." German newspapers are raving about the "enemy's triumph" at Spa, and calling the conference "a second Versailles," though that conference modified considerably the terms imposed on Germany, and decreased the quantity of coal required. Herr Maehlig, the Prussian minister of home affairs, raving about the coal arrangement says: "Under no circumstances will our miners allow themselves to be forced to revive the French coal industry and at the same time bury and sap Germany. Our Ruhr miners are not coolies." These are the Germans who deliberately destroyed the French coal mines, and this is the way they act when they are forced to make partial restoration for their wanton and criminal acts. This, too, is the same Stinnes who egged on the German government, during the war, to destroy those mines, in order that he might extend his own coal monopoly to France. Incidentally, he is credited with the principal responsibility for the looting of French and Belgian factories during the war, and the transfer of their industrial machinery to Germany, or its destruction on the spot when it could not be moved. The Germans should have thought of this possibility of retribution when their leaders were ordering those depredations and their soldiers were obediently carrying out the orders, to the applause of the German public. As it is, they are getting off easy.

Villa's surrender looks very much like a successful case of blackmail. The Mexican government might conceivably have run down "Pancho" and his robber band and put them out of business permanently, but it would have been a long, hard job. To keep Villa reasonably bottled up in his mountains and incapable of harm was costing the government 40,000 pesos a day—and the Mexican silver peso is worth more than it used to be. It was cheaper to buy Villa off with a pension for him and land settlements for his followers, and the De La Huerta government decided to do so. It may be the sensible thing to do, humiliating as it must be to the Mexican authorities. There is a serious question, though, whether, instead of removing the last big obstacle to Mexican unit, it will not encourage other "Robin Hoods" to arise in the hope of collecting similar blackmail as their pay for "being good."

Life Insurance For Cows, Sheep, etc.

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Life insurance for cows, sheep, pigs, horses and other live stock on the farm, has been provided for in Italy by government decree. In the past, the Italian farmer carried all his live stock insurance with local mutual benefit insurance companies, which were unable financially to protect him against abnormal death rate due to plague or other calamity. Under the new decree branches of the National Institute for Local Insurance of Live stock will be opened in all important centers, and its large funds will be available for insurance against normal as well as abnormal losses.

JOHN IS ANGRY.

"You see, John,' said Bobby with a laugh, "that you never can bank on a woman not changing her mind."

"I haven't changed my mind, Bobby," I said with a smile. "I have always intended that this room should be hung with this beautiful gold paper."

"Why didn't you tell me you were going to do this,' interrupted John angrily. "You didn't ask me anything about it,' I answered, "and I naturally supposed that, as the house was a gift to me, I should be allowed to exercise my own taste in decorations and furnishings."

"But everything you have had before this, has been colonial, and so that settled that matter."

"Probably that was the reason I wanted something different."

"It cost me $325 for the paper on this room," said John.

Can Not Use Them.

"I am sorry,' I answered, "because I can not possibly use this paper with the furnishings I am going to put into the room."

"But, but, Elizabeth said she knew—" and then John stopped in confusion, while I caught a look of comprehension, passing between Helen and Bobby.

"Well, you see, John," I said sweetly,' Elizabeth was mistaken. She didn't know anything about it. I am so sorry if she has gotten you into this, particularly as you say you have paid $325 for decorations. But after this, perhaps, you will realize that I am perfectly able to decorate and furnish my own home."

"It was rather a nasty thing to say. I knew, but I felt I had to say it before Helen and Bobby, because if I had not done so, it would have led to an endless quarrel with John. As it was, Bobby interrupted with a hearty laugh saying, "Katherine got you there, John. You had better give in."

John subsided, but he sulked all through the Gaylords' visit, and he would not go home with me to the hotel, saying that he had a luncheon engagement with some business friends.

Bobby went away with John, and Helen accepted my invitation for luncheon at the hotel. I think she was rather curious to see if my prophecy rearding a letter from Karl would come true.

As we went into the elevator, Helen said: "Take me to see Mary."

Find Her Asleep.

We went into her room and found her asleep.

"Isn't she an angel?" I asked.

"Certainly she is that," Helen answered heartily, and as she said it the baby's lips curled in what I believed was a smile, and she put out her tiny hands gropingly and opened her big brown eyes straight into mine.

With a hungry cry I snatched her to me. Gone in a moment were all the sorrows and annoyances of the day. I forgot everything except that here in my arms, close, close to my heart, was something which was mine, absolutely mine. Something that looked to me for sustenance, something to whom I was all in all. I covered the little face with kisses and as I did so, Miss Parker came into the room and handed me a letter, saying "Here is the mail, Mrs. Gordon.'

Rail Rates Will Jump August 6

PORTLAND, Aug. 3.—Increase in both the passenger and freight rates throughout the United States will become effective Agust 26, according to word received in Portland yesterday by local railroad officials. Earlier in the day an eastern report said that the passenger rates would become effective August 20 and freight rates, August 25, but the later dispatch put both increased rates in effect on the same day.

Although local traffic experts were fearful that the flat freight increase of 33 1-3 per cen on shipments east would be a serious blow to the lumber industry of the northwest, the prediction was made at the same time that Portland would soon become the wool center of the west.

In the absence of athentic information concerning the many intricate featres of the rate increase, railroad traffic experts were preparing tariff schedules on the theory that all freight rates were increased 25 per cent in the Pacific mountain territory, and 33 1-3 per cent on shipments east of the mountain territory.

Railroad men pointed out that while the passenger rates, apparently, were increased only 20 per cent, the man or woman who buys a ticket will be compelled to pay in excess of this amount in war taxes.

Although there was no way of making an accurate estimate of the amount which would be paid to the government in war taxes on passenger fares, traffic men estimated it would be many millions of dollars. After paying the 20 per cent increase to the railroad, the passenger must pay the additional 10 per cent in war tax to the government. For instance, if the normal fare between two points is $10, the passenger now pays $11, figuring the present war tax. Under the new schedule, the rate will be $12, plus $1.20 war tax, or $13.20. Then, in addition to this will be the 50 per cent increase in Pullman fares, plus war tax, which is again pyramided.

"To my mind, there is no question but that the increased passenger rates will lessen the volume of travel," Mr. Lothrop said.

Other traffic men said that the increased passenger tariff, together with the 50 per cent Pullman car increase, would make the "stay-at-home" movement more popular throughout the United States.

AN IMPORTANT LETTER

BISHOP, CALIF.—"About five years ago I suffered severely. I consulted a local doctor and he said I would have to undergo an operation. When I said "No," he advised a course of treatments. I happened to think of Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, and in it I found my case thoroughly described. I sat right down and wrote to Dr. Pierce. I then tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—took one bottle—also one bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and used the 'Lotion Tablets' and I have not been troubled since. I have had two fine healthy boys since then, and work hard. At that time I was not able to do my own work. I have used the 'Pleasant Pellets' for the liver and bowels for about 20 years, wouldn't be without them."—MRS. S. G. ALBRIGHT, R. F. D. No. 1.

Write to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., if you want free confidential medical advice, or send 50 cents for the "Medical Adviser.
