HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

Grace Cameron's Destiny.

The next day when I went to school I was surprised to find on my desk a note saying: "Don't speak to me, I'm mad at you. Gracie."

I had forgotten that anything I might have said would hurt Gracie's pride and I turned around in my seat to look at her inquiringly.

Before my eyes met hers, however, they looked into a pair of the shiniest most roguish, and as I found out afterwards, the most irresponsible eyes I had ever seen. But the wide grin was so infectious that I, too, smiled and did not look further to learn what Gracie meant by her note. Somehow, for the first time since I had known Gracie Cameron, I didn't seem to care whether she was mad at me or not.

I think it was because Grace was so beautiful that I loved her. All my life I have wished for beauty and when Grace perpetrated many little childish meannesses upon me, I had always forgiven her because when I glanced into her sky blue eyes and looked at her appealing, childish mouth, my wrath died.

Today, I think she was much surprised that I did not come to her with the usual childish apology, "I did not mean to make you mad, Gracie. Let's kiss and be friends again."

She had seen me turn around and must have caught the glance between the new boy and myself, for there was an audible angry sniff which caused me to turn back again. Once more I looked into the boy's mischievous face and with a great effort, suppressed a laugh, for over one of those twinkling eyes a lid dropped and into the cheek toward Grace a tongue was thrust.

Then and there started a kind of understanding between Kenneth Halsey and me. It was an understanding which grew with our years and which was broken only when I withdrew myself from his friendship, because, as I grew older, I realized the difference in our positions in life.

I sometimes wonder if that withdrawal was not a mistake on my part —a mistake for which I have had to pay with grief and tears. At the time, of course, I was very much hurt at his seeming neglect and in my foolish pride in hunting for a reason, hit upon the fact that Kenneth Halsey was a young man of great wealth, while I was working for my living. I know now that this idea was fostered by Grace Cameron.

As Grace and I grew older, we became more and more estranged. Her bringing up was very different from mine. Mrs. Cameron's sole idea in Grace's education and character building was that she should make a successful marriage, and to Mrs. Cameron a successful marriage was one which would bring wealth.

Grace was to be sold on the block to the highest bidder. The idea of marriage based on money was instilled into Grace Cameron from earliest maturity. Her whole scheme of life was planned on the idea of progressing from a home of competence to a home of luxury. Nothing was too great to be sacrificed for this end. Grace Cameron was taught that she must make only friends who would help her toward a wealthy marriage. Her girlhood, her young womanhood must be steadfastly devoted to this one end, regardless of the dictates of her heart or conscience.

Of what her duties or her life might be after marriage, she had no conception. No ideas or ideals concerning this were ever given her. From her mother she must have imbibed the idea of the old fairy tale which always ended, "And then the girl married the Prince and lived happily ever after."

Mrs. Cameron was very careful, too, tha, Grace should understand that the girl must marry a "prince" to be "happy ever afterward." And so the mother taught the daughter every superficial grace, every secret of allure, every care that could be bestowed upon her person to make her more desirable in the eyes of men.

But the mother, blinded by her all-consuming ambition, wholly neglected the spiritual and character charm without which no woman can be truly beautiful. She paid no attention to Grace's growing selfishness, to her utter disregard of truth when it suited her; to her lack of knowledge of the arts of homemaking; to her disinclination to work anything out to its logical conclusion; to her refusal to accept responsibility. And so, the soul of Grace Cameron shrivelled and shrunk, while her physical beauty grew more glorious with each passing day. She was like a wonderful flower that has been robbed of its perfume.

Of course, I did not know this at the time. I was too young, too inexperienced. Oh, how I have envied Grace Cameron, her beauty, her grace, her joy of living. It is only now that I find that even with all the great sorrows of my life, I would not exchange places with Grace Cameron, and tonight I almost feel that my future is brighter than hers.

SOLVE HOUSING PROBLEM.

LOS ANGELES, Sept 18.—Methods used in aiding employes to buy Liberty Bonds during the war are to be used to aid them in buying their homes according to the leading phase of a housing scheme under consideration by the Los Angeles Railway according to the announcement of G. J. Khuris, recently.

The plans contemplate the setting of $150,000 to be loaned to employes at a low rate of interest for home building, the loans to be paid out in small amounts from the men's pay checks, Mr. Khurts said.

Another phase of the plan will be the building of "bungalow courts" where accomodations will be available for the company's employes at low rents. A start on this latter idea was made some time ago.

Most of the buildings it is expected will be built with convenient distances to the company's shops and car barns.

High priced cars used them. Why not yours? The National Windshield Visor will surprise you. H. Merten.
