Location Sky-Line Highway Under Way

EUGENE, Sept. 18.—The forest service reconnaisance party that started work in July at Crater lake to map out a route for the proposed sky-line highway along the summit of the Cascade mountains, has reached Obsidian cliffs, in Lane county, and only a few miles from the McKenzie river highway, according to N. F. Macduff, supervisor of the Cascade national forest, who has just returned from a ten days' trip through the forest.

Members of the party have sent word to Mr. Macduff that from Diamond lake to the old military road over the summit by way of the Willamette pass a very easy grade has been found and Mr. Macduff says that from his own personal observations he knows there is an easy route fro mthat point to the McKenzie river highway. North of the McKenzie highway the sky-line highway will of necessity be compelled to extend to lower levels owing to the vast lava beds on the summit and for several miles west of it in eastern Lane and Linn and western Deschutes counties. It would be practically an impossibility to build thru the lava beds, says Mr. Macduff.

The party, which is headed by M. A. Johnson, engineer in the forest service, and F. W. Cleator, landscape engineer, expected to reach Mount Hood before the winter storms set in, said Mr. Macduff, but he says that, judging from the progress they have made thus far it is doubtful if they will get thta far this year.

County Officials Want Work Rushed

In order that road construction on the highway between Coquille and Roseburg, especially the hard-surfacing, may be expedited next year, Judge Wade of Coos county has asked the Douglas county court to co-operate with the officials of Coos county and draw up tentative plans for the hurried completion of the project. Representatives of both Douglas and Coos counties will meet with the Oregon highway commission October 5. They will urge that the highway commission award a sum sufficient for the work and that the contracts be let this winter so that the construction can be prosecuted as soon as the weather will permit. At a meeting in October a complete co-operation between the county and state will be effected.

FAIR IS SUCCESS

The Smith River fair was the best ever held according to those who returned to the city Friday night from attendance. The people of the Smith River district responded in a fine fashion and the best community fair of the circuit was held with a wonderful stock show as the chief feature. The people of the community decided to make the affair a yearly occurence and will erect stock sheds before the next fair. Those who returned from the fair were Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Haslett, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Street and Mrs. H. C. Seymour. Mr. Seymour went on to Marshfield and will join his wife in this city in a few days.

TEAMS CARRY OSTEOPATHS

The eastern college football teams are considering the idea of copying this season the stunt which proved so successful on some of the elevens of the west, that is, carrying an osteophatic physician with them for first aid adjustment on the field, says the September issue of the Journal of the American Osteopathic Association.

Some of the league baseball teams are also contemplating the same thing, as the greatest baseball players have for some time utilized individually the services of osteopaths in getting back into shape after a serious mishap. "Glass Arms" particularly is the thing that pitchers are afraid of, as in the past this has been incurable, and has retired many a good man, but is now being cured by the osteopaths.

Some of the western leagues keep an osteopath with them all of the time, through the season, and their statistics show a better maintenance of efficiency than before they adopted this plan.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

Kenneth's Father.

My childhood must have been quite happy, because I believe the happy people, like happy countries, have brief histories, and I remember only occasional episodes during my childhood days.

I do know, however, that it was I who rode the pony with Kenneth always; and it was I who did all the outdoor things with him that children do—climbed the fences, roamed the woods to find the first trailing arbutus in the Spring, and climbed the trees to pick the highest dogwood blossoms for the highest ones always seemed the most beautiful. But it was Grace whom Kenneth took to the little dancing parties. It was she that he drove in his first roadster. I often saw him taking Grace to the matinee with Mrs. Cameron for chaperone. At the time I did not think much about this, as I would much rather have done the athletic stunts, but as I grew older I sometimes wondered why he never asked me to go to the parties or the theaters.

The years sped by rapidly, until it came time for us to leave school, and we three, Grace Cameron, Kenneth Halsey and myself, were more or less together, as children are who live in the same street and neighborhood.

At first Jimmie Callahan used to "butt in" occasionally, as Kenneth called it, but after he began to work in his father's grocery store, nights and mornings, he did not have time to trot around with us. I remember he said to me once: "It's no use, Ann, I never can go in your crowd, and I don't want to go with any of them but you. There isn't any fun in any of them but you, and I don't want you to go and let that Kenny Halsey make love to you, for some day I am going to grow up and marry you myself."

"Hush, Jimmie!" I said. "That's no way to talk to little girls," for at twelve I now know I was singularly young. "You have to wait until you're very, very old to get married."

"Well, mebbe so, mebbe so!" he said. "But I just want you to understand it's me you're going to marry and not that boy who lives in the big house."

I went home and told my mother and she gave one of her little gurgly, crinkly laughs, and then became rather grave, as she said: "Ann, I hope you won't think of getting married for many years!"

"I'm never going to get married, mother, dear," I said, "and if I did think about it, I wouldn't marry Jimmie Callahan. When I grow up to get married I want lots of money to buy pretty things. I want to live in a big house, and I want, most of all, mother, to see you dressed in some other dress than that old black serge you wore all last winter."

"Well, I hope it will be a long time before you have to think about it, Ann," said my mother, with a sigh.

The next morning, Kenneth Halsey came to school with a look of great importance on his face, and announced: "My dad came home last night, and I can't go with you, Ann, to ride the pony this afternoon, but you can take the pony and ride alone if you want to."

"All right," I said, "I'd rather go alone than with you." Kenneth looked a little hurt, but said nothing, and as we raced up the steps of the big house that night, I looked up into the face of a very handsome man. A man whose hair was growing gray at the temples and whose eyes seemed to look at the world in a tired manner.

"And who may this little girl be?" he asked.

"It's Ann Whitson, Dad."

"Ann Whitson, Ann Whitson," murmured the man in such a peculiar tone that it seemed to me that I had heard my name for the first time. "You're not the daughter of Margaret Whitson, are you?"

"Yes, sir," I answered.

"And your father?" he asked. And I answered innocently, "I do not know."

ANTI-MARRIAGE GIRLS

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 18.—Lieut. Colonel P. H. Fremantle, M. P. suggested that a leading cause of the decreased birth rate was the fact that young women who find independence in work do not want to marry or if they do marry do not wish to have a family. He said this accounted for the increase in the number of anti-marriage girls.

TONBRIDGE, Eng., Sept. 18.—Councillor Donald Clark has received nearly 2,000 replies to the letter recently published from a Californian asking him to find him a wife. Most of the letters have been sent on to the Californian, and there were only one or two letters that did not bear the sign of sincerity.
