The Symbol of Merit

In ancient Assyria, stone jars marked with certain seals were known to contain wine of the highest quality. In modern times articles stamped with certain trade marks are recognized as supreme in their field. The Bosch trade mark is a notable symbol of merit—a mark which for more than a score of years has designated supreme quality, and proved this meaning to more than 4,000,000 users of Bosch High Tension Magneto Ignition. Through the world it designates America's Supreme Ignition system—the highest of manufacturing ideals, zealously guarded and scrupulously maintained. To seek this magneto "A-B" trade mark, to find it and to make use of the automotive electrical products it identifies, is to be positively satisfied.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

My Father.

"But, but I don't understand," said Kenneth's father.

"Don't make me tell it all over again," said my mother in a trembling voice. "I thought I had put it out of sight so long ago."

"Ann, little Ann," said Kenneth's father, "will you play with Kenneth a little while?"

"I can't," I answered. "He told me he was going to stay with you, and said I had to go and ride my pony alone."

"Well, you see he isn't with me," said Mr. Halsey. "You go and try to find him for I want to talk with your mother."

"I didn't want to go. Some way what he was going to say seemed to be of great interest to me. 'Bob Carleton,' 'Bob Carleton.' The name kept repeating itself in my mind."

All at once I knew, and I rushed down the street to where I found Kenneth, sitting in the hammock. He stared at me with an expression of contempt.

"Don't you know, Ann," he said, "that if your father's name is Carleton, yours can't be Whitson?"

I burst into tears. "Oh, I wanted a father so much," I said, and I turned around and walked back to my mother.

"What is the matter, Ann?" said my mother, as I came sobbing down the street.

"I thought I had found my father, and Grace told me that I hadn't."

"There, you see, Albert. It will be better for me to go away. I cannot live here among the old neighbors who have known all my life's tragedy. They will make it so hard for Ann."

"Stay where you are, Margaret. I think you are the bravest woman I have ever known, and that wouldn't be saying much, for between you and me, the women I have known, haven't been worth their salt."

"But if I stay, Albert—"

"Yes, I know, you will have to tell Ann."

"All right, mother, tell me!" I interrupted eagerly.

Again my mother leaned hard against the fence, near where we were standing.

"You have been so brave, Margaret, that one other little grief will not matter."

"Oh, yes it will, yes it will, Albert! Do you know I had hoped to die before I would have had to tell Ann?"

At this I sensed that it was something terrible and I began to cry afresh.

Kenneth's father put his hand to my head and said, "Don't cry, child."

"I can't," I sobbed. "And then he turned to my mother and said a little cynically, 'I wonder if this will be the last time she will find her doll is filled with sawdust.'"

"I always knew they were filled with sawdust," was my quick rejoinder.

"And that's the reason I never liked them! I don't want mother to tell me anything about sawdust dolls," Grace Carleton plays with sawdust dolls. Tell her about them. I'll go and play with Kenneth and send her down here!"

"So, dear, come back, come back!" said my mother. "Mr. Halsey was saying some things that only grown up people can understand."

"He meant that I was going to tell you something that probably would grieve you."

"Albert," she said, turning to me, "I cannot tell her, I cannot tell her tonight."

"Oh, yes, you must," I said, "because I know that you never will be happy until you do tell me!"

"I'm afraid, Ann, dear, that you never will be happy after I have told you. Come into the house, child. I'm going to tell you of your father! And tearfully my mother bowed an adieu to Kenneth's father."

DANGERS OF A COLD.

JITNEY TO OUST RICKSHAW

March of Progress in Japan Means End of Vehicle So Dear to Heart of Tourist.

That familiar ancient relic, rickshaw, a slender carriage drawn by man-power, seems now on way to its deathbed, to the great wall of curious tourists. The existing narrow and bad roads alone are keeping up its life. Whether for good or for ill, the growing severity of the world-wide struggle for existence has been compelling the reluctant Japanese to forsake many of the antiquated things and institutions that had long been dear to their hearts. Esthetically disposed men like Lafcadio Hearn would have Japan remain forever "picturesque" and curse the skyscrapers and factory chimneys; but a nation, like an individual, must live, and live decently too. Present age is no doubt an age of machinery; and no man-power can cope with the general tide of the world, and hence the mechanization of almost everything. Neither can man-power pretend to rival with mechanical force—it must give way to jitney. It had its day. But the rickshaw men do not think so. They have the love and respect of their trade. When lately the city of Yokohama granted a license to a big jitney bus company, the rickshaw men attempted a desperate effort to smother the project at the outset, but it proved in vain. And numerous baby-motor cars, allowing two passengers, will soon be speedily carrying people around at the rate of 25 sen per mile.—East and West News.

CRETE ONCE A GREAT POWER

Mistress of the Sea When King Minos Ruled—Remarkable Laws Under Which People Lived.

Minos, king of Crete, exercised a preponderating power on the sea; he drove out the barbarous Carians from the Cyclades, and exterminated piracy which among the Greeks had been openly professed; he kept the people of the coasts in awe of him, and at the same time forced them to pay him tribute.

Crete was advantageously situated to become mistress of the sea, but at length a confederacy arose which put an end to her dominion. Minos wished to render the Cretans mild and gentle in their manners. To attain this object he allowed free indulgence, Plato says, to licentious excess, even of the most flagitious kind, hoping that the refinements of gallantry would mitigate the native ferocity of his subjects.

As individuals the Cretans possessed eminent skill in military affairs, while the laws which they adopted prevented the state from undertaking any great enterprise abroad. They elected ten cosmes, or regulators, to govern in peace and war, and when the period of their office was completed they remained members of the legislature. The judges were all men of advanced age, and young men were never allowed to propose a change in the law, and all proposals were made in the senate, and secretly. Slaves filled the soil, and the citizens set together in public companies, while the country was divided into twelve portions for agriculture and business.

Charge for Fuse Replacement.

It has been the general custom among the electrical companies of this country to make free replacement of the fuses which are blown out from time to time but there is now a general tendency among these corporations to make a charge for this service. It is necessary to have men ready at all hours, especially at night, to answer calls so that the service may be restored with the least possible delay and the expense of this has been found to be a burden which it is now proposed to relieve themselves of by making a charge. Some companies which hesitate to take this step are urging their patrons to lay in a supply of fuses which are sold by the company at cost and in case of a blow-out they can make the renewal themselves.—Exchange.

Ambition Lives.

It is an unusual thing to see a mother and all of her children attending school together, but such is the spectacle which may be witnessed at the summer term of the Eastern Kentucky state normal school at Richmond, Ky. This family of students, consisting of mother, two sons and two daughters, all from Barboursville, Ky. The mother, Mrs. E. P. Gray, is the wife of one of the best-known chautauque entertainers, who is now in the west on the platform. She brought her children to the school to take the course and decided, after reaching the institution, to engage in study herself and will take a course along with her four children.

Pigeons Set Clock Back.

I am informed that the town clock of Beverly is not quite suited to the three pigeons who recently perched on the hour hand, or else the birds did not like the daylight saving idea. However, they perched in their "time" position long enough to set the clock back one-half hour.—Boston Post.

Adaptability.

"Of course, you are in favor of votes for women."

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "A man who hopes to hold his own in politics must do his best to be in favor of anything that anybody wants."

ALL DELIGHT TO HONOR FOCH

Whole World Paid Homage to the Genius of the Great French Master of War.

Marshal Foch's home in the Avenue de Saxe, Paris, has become one of the wonderful dwelling places of the world. Far more than a dwelling place, it is now a museum of glory. The rooms of that modest first floor flat are crowded with the trophies which all civilization has offered in homage to the man who led the allies to victory. Such profusion of beautiful things and notable works of art is rare, and amidst it the unassuming figure of the marshal moves almost unnoticed, as it seems, by the possession of these precious tributes, which only his kindly courtesy induced him to accept.

They come from every part of the world. That large, solid silver statuette of a French general of the Napoleonic wars is signed by Los Amigos de Francia a Francophile league in Spain. Next to it is an alabaster figure by a French master. Over the hearth stands a great gilt empire clock inscribed "To Marshal Foch, from the grateful town of Cassel."

Gold caskets, jeweled swords of honor, antique and valuable miniatures and ivories, the splendid enamel collar of the Grand Cross of the Bath, are crowded together in the glass cabinets that line the walls. Here is all the respect, all the enthusiasm, all the gratitude and joy of victory of a whole world, expressed in the finest and loveliest forms that the ingenuity of great artists, sculptors, goldsmiths, can contrive. And it is proof and touchstone of the merit of the man to whom they have been offered that he lives in this illustrious treasury of glory without seeming to be conscious either of it or his fame.—G. Ward Price, in the Continental Edition of the London Mail.
