

"In Every Respect" says the Good Judge

You get more genuine chewing satisfaction from the Real Tobacco Chew than you ever got from the ordinary kind.

The good tobacco taste lasts so long—a small chew of this class of tobacco lasts much longer than a big chew of the old kind. That's why it costs less to use.

Any man who has used both kinds will tell you that.

KILLS HUSBAND AND SELF

BRONFIELD, Eng., Sept. 27.—He tried to kill me at 11 a. m., so I killed him at 12 tonight. I have been my own detective. It is no use saying anything, as people would not believe me. So ran a letter left by Mrs. James Pendleton here after she had killed her husband by cutting his throat with a razor. She then killed herself with the same weapon.

IN YE OLDEN TIME

Hoop skirts were worn by those who first asked the druggist for, and insisted on having, the genuine Golden Medical Discovery put up by Dr. Pierce over fifty years ago. Dress has changed very much since then! But Dr. Pierce's medicines contain the same dependable ingredients. They are standard today just as they were fifty years ago.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the stomach and blood cannot be surpassed by any remedy today. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak women has never been equalled for the distressing complaints incident to womanhood. What others say: "I suffered from nervous prostration for several years, trying various remedies furnished by the doctor. NEW TERROR FOR WOMEN

PREDICTS BAD TIMES.

CARDIFF, Wales, Sept. 27.—Dr. J. H. Clapham, of King's College, Cambridge, at a meeting here predicted that an industrial and commercial slump was coming. It would begin in the field of finance, spreading to industry, and would give us a bad spell of unemployment comparable with the unemployment of the post-war period of a century ago, but more dangerous owing to the high standard of living to which the people had become accustomed. He predicted that the slump would begin in America.

Breaking Home Ties.

The next morning there was a hurried packing of my little trunk. I took with me very few of my old time frocks, for my mother said that I was to have all new ones. Not one of my friends was at the train to bid me goodbye. This, of course, was not to be wondered at, as no one knew that I was leaving so soon.

It was a very forlorn little girl, however, that boarded the train and my tear-stained face must have looked very pathetic, although I tried to seem unmoved and sophisticated as I took my seat.

In the chair next to me was a rather flamboyantly dressed youth of perhaps eighteen years. At first he paid no attention to me, but evidently because he found no one better to talk to and being at the age when he must talk to someone, he asked, "Are you going to the city?" "Yes," I answered briefly. "Pretty small town you've just left. Is it your home?"

"Yes."

"Lived there all your life?" "Yes."

"Ever been in the city before?" "No."

"Gee, I envy you. You'll find the city a fine place, provided you find your voice at the same time and you are able to talk to a fellow."

"My mother says that well-bred young girls do not talk to strangers." "Old stuff, old stuff, child," said the youth patronizingly, but he said it with such an engaging smile that I immediately concluded that there wasn't anything particularly wrong in my talking with him—and besides, I was so lonely. It seemed to me that in all the world I had no contact with my fellow man, except through the youth who sat beside me and who had slantily told me that my mother's admonition was "old stuff."

"I am not going to hurt you, little girl," he said. "I just feel sorry for you because I know that you are leaving your mother and all your folks behind and I rather admire your pluck in trying to appear as though you do not care, although a moment ago your eyes were swollen with tears. Say, did anybody ever tell you you had mighty pretty eyes?"

My answer surprised him, for he laughed and said, as though addressing a third person: "Oh, she isn't so unsophisticated as I thought. Lots of people have told her that she has pretty eyes. And who might they be, little girl?"

"My mother, the doctor, my teacher, Jimmy Callahan, Kenneth Haley and Grace Cameron, although Grace said that she didn't think brown eyes were as pretty as her own, which are blue."

I could not understand why this young man laughed harder than ever when I answered him truthfully and why he said to me: "Say, you're a deep one. But I like your grit and I like your ways and I don't know where you're going in the city nor what you are going to do, but possibly I may do you some good sometime. Anyway, I want you to know I am Jerome Hathaway. My father keeps the largest restaurant in the town and any time you call me up I'll invite you for a swell feed, anyway. You can call me Jerry if you want to, for while I don't very often pay much attention to little girls like you, some way you've got me, girlie, you've got me."

Tomorrow—Ann meets a stranger.

Want Recipe For Serving Prunes

How else can prunes be served other than stewed. Any ex-vec will say that it can't be did. Here Douglas county has been raising prunes for a great number of years, and yet whenever you ask for prunes you always get them stewed. Once in a while you do run across a prune cobbler, but surely there are many attractive and at the same time delicious ways of serving prunes. If there are such ways Ray W. Clark, of the Uniqua hotel, wants to know them.

"Here we are in the heart of the prune belt," says Mr. Clark, "and we have no special ways of serving prunes. We have served them in cobbler and we have served them stewed, but there must be some better ways. It will be a big advertisement for Douglas county if this hotel can put out some new dishes in which prunes are an attractive and practical form are the chief features. The housewives of Douglas county must know some of these recipes. If so, I would like to know of them and we will make a new feature dish at the Uniqua."

Mr. Clark will appreciate any practical recipe for the cooking of prunes and will welcome any communication containing information in regard to such dishes.
