

Official Democratic Statement

By Douglas County Democratic Central Committee.

The mere fact that a candidate for county office has a "consistent dry" record is not the only item of consideration in the matter of the qualifications. It is a fine thing to have a record as a consistent dry, indeed it is even better to have such a reputation, than to have the reputation of being a reformed "booze hoister." However, there are other qualifications which voters will take into consideration in selecting the men to fill the county positions, and among these qualifications are efficiency, respect and tolerance of the rights and opinions of other individuals.

JAMES M. COX

While the wet and dry question is entirely apart from any issue in this county and will be seized upon only by some exasperated timorous soul, fearful of defeat, yet it may be now and properly said here that the efficiency of a man of inherent ability may be, and often is, destroyed because of an obsession along certain lines. For instance, a man may be so filled with one theory as to utterly destroy his intelligence along other lines, and we witness legislators with such obsessions, spending their time in advocating wild and foolish legislation, entirely apart, indeed, from the line of their obsession, legislation that the thoughtful and the sober electorate will summarily down when given the opportunity of the referendum.

A man's mind may be "drunk" from other causes than alcohol.

This nation was made saloonless and will be kept saloonless, thank "consistent dry" or out and out prohibitionist, who for more than fifty years labored unavailing. The saloon was voted out and will be kept out by the vote of the men who have been known to take a drink occasionally, and yet be a good citizen withal. Such men now resent the term of "roughnecks." The Pharisaical-brother-thou, posing of an intolerant candidate will not draw the necessary votes from men and women of the average good citizen class—the class that is really responsible for a stainless flag.

To be an efficient enforcement officer, other qualifications but than the mere fact of having been a "consistent dry" is necessary. For example, an efficient sheriff needs intelligence, he needs tact, he needs business efficiency, he needs courage and above all else he needs initiative and an endowment of good horse sense.

initiative and an endowment of good horse sense. Such are the qualifications of the retiring sheriff of Douglas county, a man who is now known from one end of the state to the other for his efficiency as sheriff, the apprehender of the real criminal, the terror of the bootlegger who piled trade between Oregon and California. Yet the retiring sheriff of Douglas county had among his friends and supporters men who may have been known on certain occasions to have taken a drink. The fact that he had the support of the "roughnecks" who did not pose as the embodiment of sobriety and the Pharisaical holiness and virtue has not destroyed the efficiency of the retiring sheriff; and such support will not destroy the efficiency of the man who will be elected to fill the vacancy.

The innuendo directed against the supporters of any candidate only serves to make them more active on his behalf; yet it is a pity that the local republican committee feels constrained in such a way as to deal in such an innuendo.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDA H. McCLONE GIBSON

Some New Ideas.

"She's an old cat," said Jerry to me confidentially.

"Yes, I guess she is," and then I paid no more attention to her.

Aunt Clara Creighton met us at the train, and I noticed she bowed to the woman who had been so interested in me. Jerry acted very gentlemanly, and very grown up as he told Mrs. Creighton he felt called upon to show me a few little attentions during my journey, because I had seemed such a little girl and so forlorn and unhappy. Then he bowed himself away, and stepped into a stunning racing car and took the wheel away from the chauffeur.

"Isn't that young man Jerry Hathaway?" asked Aunt Clara.

"Yes he said his name was Hathaway."

"I'm afraid you've been rather impudent, Ann. Jerry Hathaway is supposed to be the wildest young man in town."

"He didn't seem grown up to me at all, Aunt Clara. He just helped me eat my lunch and was just like the boys at home."

"Well, I suppose you are a little girl still," said my Aunt Clara. "but you are really a little fall for your age." Then she began to talk about my mother and my preparations for school.

At the Creightons' home I was introduced to an entirely new life. For the first time I was taught that I must not do this or that, not because it was wrong, but because it was not conventional, that I must not renew my acquaintance with Jerry Hathaway until after I had been properly introduced to him; that I must not be myself at any time and show my likes and dislikes, because that would not be ladylike; that I must not speak to certain young women, even though I met them at times and was introduced to them, because they were considered to have Bohemian tendencies; that I must never dine at a restaurant without a chaperone. And all things that I saw young men doing which I was forbidden to do. In fact, here at my Aunt Clara's was the first time that I was introduced to the double standard of conduct for the young men and the young ladies. I grew used to these ideas in time, and became quite well versed in the conventional manner of society before it was time for me to go to the school. With my Aunt one afternoon I met Jerry Hathaway, on the street and cut him dead, but instead of having any effect on him, he winked his eye at me as we passed. He seemed to understand immediately why I did it.

My mother wrote me daily, and I knew from her letters that upon my going out of her life, she was just marking time until I should return. She seldom mentioned Grace Cameron or Kenneth Halsey, and I was surprised when I reached the preparatory school to find that Grace was to be one of the pupils.

The day I saw her there for the first time, I forgot all our animosity. She was someone from home, someone I had known all my life. "Oh, Grace, Grace," I called to her. "Are you coming to school here? I am so glad. When did you see my mother last? Is she looking well?" I had gotten all this out before I noticed that she had not put her hand out and was looking me straight in the face, as though she had never seen me before. "Oh," she drawled. "It's Ann—Ann—say, just what is your last name anyway?"

I could hardly believe my ears. My face must have expressed my emotion, and my voice trembled with anger as I answered: "You know very well what my last name is, but from now on I am going to forget yours. I don't ever want to speak to you again," and I turned and left her.

Gen. George d'Heberg, who carries scars of nine wounds received in the wars of Russia, including the Russo-Jap war and the World War, and who, having lost his estate in Russia and France, is now working as a mechanic in a New York garage.

Deserves Place in History

With the dawn of Atele civilization in ancient Greece, Cecrops, an Egyptian, built a town on the site where later the citadel of Athens rose in magnificence. He introduced morals and judicial regulations, and the country under his rule became an asylum for the innocent and persecuted. Froth that time on festivals, compact and laws extended their beneficial influence. About 130 years after him the Phoenician Cadmus brought the use of letters into Bœotia; and at Thebes, in the same country, he erected a citadel. The greatest lyric poet and the greatest general of the Greeks were Bœotians, but nevertheless this people was accused of stupidity. While their value was not appreciated, their discoveries were brought to perfection by others and more usefully applied.

It is remarkable that Cadmus the father of learning, who taught us to hand down our thoughts to futurity, came into Greece just at a time when Joshua, the leader of the Jews, drove the Phœnecian tribes toward the sea and compelled them to seek refuge in distant colonies. This act of a despised people, scarcely known to Greek historians, was the occasional cause of all the intellectual and moral excellence which has arisen through the influence of literature.

ON THE WINGS OF THE WIND

Nothing So Small That the Zephyra Shall Not Find It and Spread It Beneficially.

Acres of perfume come on the wind from the black and white of the beanfield; the fire fill the air by the ropes with perfume. I know nothing to which the wind has not some happy use. Is there a grain of dust so small the wind shall not find it out? Ground in the mill-wheel of the centuries, the iron of the distant moon tins floats like gossamer, and is drunk up as dew. A thousand miles of cloud go by from north till night passing overhead without a sound; the immense peaks, a mile square, are used to each other, side by side, last parallel, book shape, coming up from the horizon and widening as they approach. From north till night, the silent footfalls of the ponderous vapors travel overhead, no sound, no creaking of the wheels and rattling of the chains; it is calm at the summit, but the wind labors without an effort above, with such ease, with such power. Gray smoke hangs on the hill side where the crotch-horns are piled a curtain of smoke; the wind comes and it draws its length along like the gent from the eastern port; they leap up a red flame shaking its head it shines in the bright sunlight; you can see it across the valley. —R. C. Jeffrey.

"THE PRUNE CHAUTAUQUA." The following poem by M. O. Evans, field manager of the Oregon Growers Co-operative Association, appeared in the October issue of the Oregon Growers magazine. Mr. Evans is well known here: "If all the Chautauquas I ever saw, The best one was the prune chautauqua. Of the Washington County Farm Bureau bunch. They had several good speeches and plenty of lunch. They came from Gales Creek, Laurel, and some from Newberg swelled the ranks. Beneath the trees on the college green, Two hundred prune folks there were seen. Of drying costs and other things, Expenses which the prune crop brings, They talked, and then they heard advice From men who dry prunes mighty nice. Earl Percy made things move along. His wife sang us a funny song About the packers and the buyers In the land of prunes and dryers. Prof. Walter Brown, of O. A. C., Told how to fertilize a tree, And C. J. Hard told what he saw When he was down in the Umpqua. Each family before home they had Joined the 'Stewed Prune Club' Forest Grove. And all agreed the day well spent As happily they homeward went.
