Movie Closeups

The heartaches of a girl who wanted a husband who neither spoke to nor even looked at other women, came in considerable quantities, to Billie Billings, whose rôle is portrayed by Constance Talmadge in her latest picture "A Temperamental Wife" which will be seen commencing tonight at the Liberty theatre.

There was only one man, Billie discovered, who answered to the very strict requirements of her "ideal" and that was Senator Newton, of Nevada, a rather sickly bachelor, who was so bashful he couldn't shake hands with a woman without getting a quiver down the spine.

Billie Falls Into Marriage
Consequently Billie fell desperately in love with the "gentleman from Nevada" and things went smoothly until the anniversary of their first month of wedded bliss when Billie learned to her anguish that her one woman husband employed a lady stenographer.

Jealously little Billie cried, coaxed and entreated with the senator that he fire his stenographer immediately. The senator's flat refusal to take a foolish step on account of his young wife's whim lead to gallons of tears shed both by himself and his wife. Billie has arranged for a reconciliation supper when a sudden twist in affairs leads her to elope with a Bulgarian count.

How the senator is moved to tears, fast action and almost cruelty ends this story and also ends the jealous streak in little Billie Billings for all time to come.

With a trunk valuing with five hundred dollars worth of new clothes, the same amount in her purse for expenses, and abetted by a more or less unreliable amount of nerve, Leona Stafford went hunting for a rich husband.

"To attract men you must be a mysterious woman with a past," her friend had told her, when it was decided that Leona's thousand dollar legacy could best be invested in a plot to ensnare a millionaire.

So Leona brushed the dust off of her French, borrowed Toodles, a ferociously tame bulldog, and went to a fashionable seaside resort and pretended to be the French Widow of a Russian, and hinted at a dark and hidden past.

Leona based such procedure would start something, and it did, but not exactly what Blanche Sweet expected in "Help Wanted—Male" the romantic comedy drama showing at the Liberty for two days, beginning tonight. It's a Jesse D. Hampton-Palmer release with Henry King acting as director and leading man.

Want any chickens killed? Mary Pickford has designed a new way.

In "The Hoodlum" the second picture produced at her own studios, and which will be seen at the Majestic tonight, Miss Pickford becomes a terror for all turkeys, ducks and chickens living in and around the country roads out of New York City.

The answer in a speedy, sporty, automobile, which Miss Pickford, as Amy Burke, "The Hoodlum" uses to clip the rear feathers of edible birds in a most speedy and accurate manner. As the pampered granddaughter of Alexander Guthrie, she scores a high record as an auto terror.
