TOO PRONE TO FORGET.

While it is not yet two years since the world struggle ended between the United States and Germany, the fire of American patriotism to many has lost its enthusiasm to a more or less extent. Those who took part in the war mainly from the standpoint of financing and using their influence in various ways to put down the German war lords and their millions of followers, are too prone to forget the past and become carried away by business activities of the world at large.

Not so with the valiant and noble youth of our country who left his home and loved ones, gave up a bright business career, and, greatest of all, willingly offered his blood and flesh for the security of those who remained, in perfect safety, far from the seat of the greatest and most destructive war ever waged in the world's history. He had gone to a foreign soil there to defend America—the mothers, fathers and daughters against the outrageous atrocities and damnable features of the great slaughter being waged by the Germans for complete and absolute world domination.

These boys will never forget—those patriots who faced the roaring cannon and hellish devices employed by the enemy have marked in their very souls the true intent and motives of the opposition. Nothing is needed to refresh in their minds the true spirit of American patriotism. They will never forget—probably never forgive—so forcibly was impressed upon them the responsibility to their country and loved ones at home.

To awaken that dormant and lax degree of interest in past events of such a grave and important nature, there must be something occur to refreshen and impress our people with their duty toward those who have saved this country from the invasion of the enemy. Sad as it may be, the burial of Private Roy Smith, of Glide, whose funeral services will be conducted in this city tomorrow, is one of those occurrences that brings to every home in the community cause for deep regret and serves to kindle afresh in the minds of all true Americans that spirit of patriotism that was the one factor that closed the last chapter in the war with Germany. Millions of other young men gave their lives and fell before the German hordes and their last resting places will serve as a monument to their unselfish sacrifices and kindle anew that true, patriotic American citizenship found among those who have returned to their homes, banded together in the American Legion—to forever and forever protect America's rights against the invasion of the enemy—either at home or abroad.

"DEFECTIVE CHILDREN."

When the medical inspector of a big public school system announces that he finds more than half the pupils "defective," the statement is probably received by most people with a gasp of horror. But like all such statements, it is not so bad as it sounds. "Defective," in the parlance of modern hygiene, means "not perfect." Most of the defects, it is explained, are ocular, dental and digestive, and easily corrected or helped. There was probably just as much eye trouble and tooth trouble and incipient goiter, and possibly as much "malnutrition," among children in the school days of these children's parents and grandparents, only there were no medical examiners to point them out and few teachers or parents to develop much interest in the matter.

It is, one might say, because we do things so much better nowadays that things look so much worse. Our standards are higher—health standards along with others. The "good old days" were days when children were systematically neglected and allowed to die young or grow up stunted or deformed in body and mind. In this age we order things better—that is, we are beginning to. There is still a vast amount of progress to be made before every child has a fair chance.

As for standards of perfection, it may well be doubted whether, with all our "defects," Americans are inferior to any other race, present or past. The old Greeks are generally thought of as "the perfect race," but there is no evidence that the living Greeks of the age of Pericles had much in common with the marvelous gods and goddesses carved by Phidias and Praxiteles. Plato explains that the sculptors would take a head from one model, a neck from another, shoulders from a third, a chest from a fourth, etc., making a "perfect" composite.

Myopia, adenoids, diseased tonsils, ulcerated and crooked teeth, spinal curvature, etc., were doubtless plentiful even among Athenian school children, in what is considered the golden age of physical culture. Americans can beat that era now, if they will only take a little trouble.

If votes cost as much as other commodities in this year of grace—or disgrace, if you prefer—there needn't be much worry about corruption on election day.

If "women are people," as the suffragists have so eloquently maintained, we rather think they'll vote pretty much the same way male people do.

The trouble with anti-suffragettes is that they seem to think they're their sisters' keepers—and that their sisters all need keepers.

Men have an inveterate distrust of women's financial understanding. And was it the men or the women that fell for Ponzi?

Where are those political experts who used to argue that a national debt was a good thing for a country?

None of the philippics hurled at the Bolshevists have been so effective as Polish bayonets.

Some people will lose their taste for food when it gets cheap again.

BUBAR BROS.
Jackson Street

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

Going Home.

My hands shook so I could not open the envelope. By intuition I knew exactly what I should read.

Miss Huntington threw her arm around me and gently drew me to her. Taking the telegram from my hand, she handed it to the principal. I buried my face on Miss Huntington's shoulder.

I wonder if at that moment I felt as did some of those women during the reign of terror we had read about in the history class, while they waited for the axe to descend. Years were compressed into that instant, and yet I did not weep. My whole soul, my whole consciousness seemed to speak the one word: "Wait!" And yet, I had a feeling as though I were trying with all my might to push back the fatal instant when I should know. I believe it was the same feeling that those women experienced just before their heads dropped into the basket of the guillotine.

"Can you be brave, dear?" I heard Miss Huntington mumur and I opened my eyes and caught her glance—her pitying glance.

I silently bowed my head.

Twice she essayed to speak and her arm clasped me a little tighter and then I said: "Never mind. You need not tell me, I know—my mother is dead." I had said these words with my eyes tightly closed but now I opened them again and found confirmation in the face of my beloved teacher.

Neither of the women said anything more to me, but with the kindest of hands, they ministered to my wants and it seemed to me only a very, very short time before I found myself on the train headed for home.

I remember feeling no surprise when I saw Kenneth Halsey apparently waiting for me at the station. He came forward quickly and said: "I am going back with you."

"How did you know?"

"My father wired me and told me to bring you home. He would have come for you himself, but there were so many arrangements to make that he told me to bring you."

"Grace will be very angry."

Kenneth said something under his breath that sounded rather profane. I did not ask him to repeat it.

Miss Huntington had come to the train with me and to her Kenneth gave the telegram from his father with the instructions.

"I am very glad, Mr. Halsey, that you can do this for Miss Whitson," she said. "I had not known until today that you and Ann were childhood friends. I'm glad she is going to meet your father when she arrives at her home, for I have dreaded very much for her to arrive there alone."

Ah, how all those hours and minutes come back to me. I was so tired, so lonely, so unhappy that when Kenneth took me in the train and sat down beside me in the drawing room, which he had reserved for me, I made no expostulations when he threw his arm about me. I just drew a little closer to him and laying my tearstained hear upon his breast, sobbed out my grief.

I had forgotten all about Grace and I accepted Kenneth just as I had always accepted him as a child. We were friends and pals again. He was the person I cared for most in the world, now that my mother was gone. In a little while he left me, telling me that he was going to order dinner.

"I can't eat," I said.

But when he returned with the most delicately ordered and deliciously cooked meal, I found that I really was very hungry.

After eating, I felt better. Strange, isn't it, that bodily comfort will help to assuage the greatest grief? That sounds very hard, doesn't it? But it is nevertheless true. I didn't know I was hungry; I only knew I was perfectly miserable—unhappy in soul and body—but after I had eaten my body grew strong enough for me to face the heartache of my soul. Since that time, I have never allowed myself, in any way, to neglect my body. I have considered it worthy of the greatest care, the greatest respect, and whatever has been my grief, I have known that as long as I could keep my body in a state of material comfort I could be strong enough to look fate in the face.

When I had finished dinner, I became much calmer and I told Kenneth that I thought I would go to bed immediately.

"Sensible Ann," he said, "and I have to add 'bravery' to your many other virtues. I'll leave you now," he added, "and the porter can make up your bed. But remember I am in the berth just outside your door and if you want anything in the night just ring and the porter can bring me your message."

Impulsively I held out both my hands. "Kenneth," I said, "I am sorry for what I said to you this afternoon."

"And so am I sorry, Ann, sorrier than you. I did not mean to hurt you. I thought I could joke with you as I did when we were children."

"And you could have, Kenneth," I said, "if we had kept up the same childish feelings for each other."

"I feel just the same toward you."

"But I had not seen you Kenneth, for so long that you seemed quite a stranger to me."

"I am never going to be a stranger to you any more, Ann dear. My dad says that you are going to live at our house and be my own sister."

And although in my heart I knew it could not be, I turned to him and like two children "we kissed again" with tears.

Tomorrow—

MAJ. WILLIAM M. KING

That he will live to be one hundred years old may be no idle boast of Maj. William M. King, eighty-year-old United States crop expert, who has been placed on the retired list after 41 years of service with the department of agriculture. As chief of the seed division Major King made the suggestion which prompted congress to authorize the free distribution of seed.

The Baptist ladies will hold a Christmas Bazaar Nov. 20. Further announcement will follow later.

The Motor Car Price Situation

A Message from J. Dallas Dort President Dort Motor Cac Company.

"The price of the Dort car is reasonable and fair; the total net advance in list within a peiiod of 2 years having been but 17 percent against advances ranging from 19 percent to 45 percent in the list of other leading makes.

Therefore there will be no price reduction by this company.

"There has been as yet, no break in material or labor cost that would warrant any price reduction in the Dort Car.

"On the contrary materials have been purchased by us and by all motor car manufacturers for 1921 production, at a very considerable advance as a whole over 1920 material costs.

"Therefore unless those purchase contracts are treated by the purchaser as scraps of paper or the seller voluntarily revises contract prices downward, there can be no justification for any motor car manufacturer to reduce prices unless he has been profiteering, which means that he has been receiving excessive profits.

"If there be such manufacturers, this is the most opportune time for them to properly adjust prices to the sound values of their products."

The present prices of current Dort Models are guaranteed against reduction.

Make Your Tractor
Absolutely Reliable

To be a profitable investment your tractor must be dependable and economical—always ready to do a big day's work without coaxing or delay. And since these qualities are determined by the ignition, you should be sure to have your tractor equipped with a Bosch High Tension Magneto.

The sparks from a Bosch Magneto are so big and hot that even though a lean mixture or low grade fuel be used, every bit of gas brought into the cylinders will be fired completely and instantly. That makes a powerful, smooth running engine with absolutely no ignition worries and a low upkeep cost.

This Bosch Service Station can add Bosch Dependability to your present tractor engine in a few hours time.

Be Satisfied. Specify Bosch.
