

Announcing a Special Exhibition and Sale of Highest Grade Furs

ONE DAY ONLY, MONDAY, OCTOBER 18th

We have fortunate in being able to make arrangements with one of the best known Fur Manufacturers in an Eastern city to ship to us for a Special One Day's Exhibition and Sale $75,000.00 worth of the best Style Furs, Coats, Scarfs, Caps and Muffs. These furs will be offered to you at about 25 per cent less than the regular prices.

We are confident that this will be the most important fur event held in Roseburg for many seasons. There is really an immense stock that we have to offer for your selection. Along with the specially consigned stock we will add our own high-grade assortment, thus giving you a choice of an unusually great number of popular style garments from which to choose at prices that you can afford to pay. Byron F. LeMaire, a well-known fur expert, will be in charge of the exhibition ready to talk to our customers regarding the change and to explain to them the merits of the different skins used in the production of the finished garments.

The assortment will include COATS, COATEES, CAPES, NOVELTY SCARFS AND BODY SCARFS.

COATS

made of Hudson seal, trimmed in marten, skunk, beaver, fitch, squirrel, raccoon, Australian opossum and plain. We will have a large line of AUSTRALIAN seal, French seal, Japanese mink, Russian wolf and coney coats, plain and trimmed, all of which have been designed to meet the most exacting customer's requirements.

COATEES

will be shown in squirrel, mole, Jap mink and Hudson seal.

CAPEES

are strong in demand and will be shown in mink, Jap mink, squirrel, mole, Hudson seal and other rare furs.

BODY SCARFS

will be the strongest in foxes and we will show them in battleship gray, dove, gunmetal, Loretta, Maurice, liberty blue, georgette, taupe, baum, marten, black, Jap cross, red foxes, lynx, Canadian wolf, raccoon, skunk, Russian wolf and other varieties.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

My Mother's Rarewell Message.

Mr. Halsey remonstrated with me no longer and we drove quietly up to the house where my mother had bid me good-bye only a few short months before, upon my last return to school.

As I walked into the hallway I seemed to feel my mother's arms about me. The whole atmosphere was permeated with her presence. Slowly I walked upstairs to my own little room and taking off my wraps, I again bathed my face in cold water. The nurse came in and asked me in a low voice if there was anything she could do for me.

"I whirled upon her suddenly, 'Yes! Yes you can! Tell me about my mother's last hours. Did she suffer?'"

"Are you sure that you want me to do this, Miss Whitson?"

"Oh, yes, yes. And I want you to tell it to me now. It's what I've been waiting for ever since I knew that she was dead."

"Your mother passed out—"

"Oh, pardon me, nurse, but please don't say 'passed out.' I know you mean to soften the blow for me, but it doesn't seem right to me to use those words. To 'pass out' means something that one does voluntarily. My mother would not willingly leave me here alone on this earth. My mother is dead, and you must say, 'when your mother died.'"

"The nurse looked at me in consternation. 'Oh my dear child, I did not mean to hurt you.'"

"I know, I understand. And now please tell me about her."

"Well, you know her heart has been weak for years, my child, and she knew that she had not long to live the last time you went back to school."

"Oh, why didn't she tell me? I would have stayed at home with her."

"That, dear child, is the reason she didn't tell you. Your mother's love for you was so deep, so profound, that she wanted to spare you any pain. The greatest joy she had was reading over to me your letters, and I was so glad that you wrote her so often."

"But I did not write her often enough. I should have written every day, and later I did not write her as often as usual."

"When she didn't get a letter from you she took out one of the old ones and read it," said the nurse with a smile. "And even when she grew steadily weaker she would not let me tell you, as she wanted you to stay until the end of the term."

Mr. Halsey came, however, and tried to persuade her to have you come home and at last she wrote you that last letter. Even then, neither the doctor nor myself thought she was so near the end, for her splendid spirit kept her alive. Indeed, just before she died she seemed better than usual. All that morning she talked quite cheerfully, and although she was not able to be up and dressed, yet she spoke about feeling better than she had in a long while. Toward noon Mr. Halsey came over and, Miss Ann, I want to tell you how devoted he has been; no brother could have been kinder."

"And when the time came for her luncheon, your mother insisted that Mr. Halsey should stay and partake of it with us. We'll have a play party, just as we used to in the long ago, I heard her say to Mr. Halsey, and he answered, 'Robert always made the third to our play parties, don't you remember, Margaret?'"

"Yes, yes, I know. Do you realize, John, that I am counting on seeing Robert very soon?"

"Mr. Halsey turned to me as though he thought she was not quite herself."

"Your mother smiled, and said, 'Oh, no, John, I'm not delirious, but I am sure that Robert is dead and if I meet him in that place where I am sure that he is, I shall tell him that I love him, and that God will let us love each other.'"

"Did my mother say that?" I asked in awe. "Did she feel that her God was still a dear God, after all she had suffered?"

"Yes, my child, and she knew, although she could not quite understand that somehow, somewhere, a mistake had been made by mortals in the Divine plan, and that where she was going it would all come right again."

"Your mother, Miss Ann, talked to me quite freely. She seemed to feel that I would in turn tell you. 'Above all,' she said, 'do not let my little girl become critical and hard, for life is a beautiful thing, even when it is most sorrowful. And will you tell her that I would not have given up that few months of happiness I had with her father for all the years of pain that have followed it?'"

At Court House, 7:30 P. M. Thursday, October 14th.

Interest centers around the fight to establish CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING IN OREGON through the passage of the Market Commission bill. It is hoped to accomplish through this act FOM THE FARMERS OR OREGON what has been accomplished by the PRODUCERS OF OREGON.

Those who touch upon the 5% interest rate bill will endeavor to present the disastrous results that would follow the passage of this radical measure. Run for the state is freely predicted if this bill should be successful at the polls.

Be sure to attend the meeting.

Air Mail Service Will Be Launched

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 14—Cities at two points of the continent, Seattle and Key West, will launch the nation's first international mail service tomorrow. It was announced here recently. In the Seattle service an airplane will leave here for Victoria, B. C., with mail for a Canadian liner leaving for points across the Pacific, and at Key West a plane will hop off with letters for Cuba.

One day, at least will be saved, it has been estimated, by handling the trans-Pacific mails between Seattle and Victoria by airplane. At present mails between the two points are handled through Vancouver, B. C., and generally take a day to make the trip. The airplane will operate on a schedule calling for one hour in flying between the two points.

Edward Hubbard, Seattle flyer has been awarded the government contract for carrying the mails. It will be his duty to take letter mail up to 600 pounds from incoming ships docking at Vancouver, and fly with it to Seattle at once. He will also deliver aboard the vessel at Victoria at the last possible moment, 600 pounds of letter mail for the Orient and Australia. Hubbard's contract calls for ten trips a month. For his service, he receives $200 a trip, or $2,000 a month. His contract runs until June 1, 1921.

Hubbard has been permitted to use in the service, his Seattle landing place will be on Lake Union, near the heart of the city. At Victoria, he will be provided by municipal authorities with a landing float.

Speeders Pay Large Fines

The city treasury has been greatly enriched during the last two days by a number of contributions received from speeders. The police force has been giving a great deal of attention to the apprehension of the violators of the vehicle ordinances, and as a result numerous speeders have been required to pay various sums for their violations. Fines are assessed at the rate of 50 cents per mile in excess of the speed limit. Those who have been arrested and fined during the last two days are: Roy Selgrist, $5; J. H. Walter, $5; F. Shoof, $7.50; Harry Shields, $3.50; A. J. Matthews, $2.50; A. S. Weinst, $3.50; J. F. Rose, $2.50; Dee Matthews, $3.50.
