A FRUIT OF THE INITIATIVE

Commenting on one of Oregon's initiative measures to be voted on Nov. 2, the New York Times of Oct. 13 has the following to say:

Oregon is a shrine where the vestal lamp of reform or change burns forever, still, one feels, sometimes or oftener, that she's too good for nature's daily food. On election day her voters will have the happiness of voting on an initiative proposal called the anti-compulsory vaccination amendment. This would prohibit "vaccination, inoculation or other form of medication," as a condition of entrance or attendance at any school, college, educational institution, or of the "employment of any person in any capacity, or for the exercise of any right, the performance of any duty or the enjoyment of any privilege"; and would repeal all provisions, constitutional, statutory municipal, of charter or ordinance, in conflict with itself.

That is, it would make infection and contagin constitutional, upset all health regulations, protect disease and the communication of disease, encourage and disseminate disease, discourage and prevent health. There are some rare reformers in Oregon, but a queerer specimen of their pernicious activity has seldom been offered to the long suffering and much-voting state.

Voters in Douglas county don't want to overlook the measure on the ballot calling for a divided session of the legislature. This paper believes the proposition to be a very good one for all concerned. At any rate it is worth giving a fair trial, and will undoubtedly result in heading off a lot of worthless laws drummed up at the eleventh hour and "slipped" through the legislative session, very little knowledge of their true intent and working capacity being known until they are in full effect. Under the proposed measure, it is intended to provide for a divided bi-ennial session of the legislature, in two periods: First period of 40 days convening the second Monday in January, 1921, and biennially thereafter to be devoted exclusively to the introduction and consideration of bills resolutions and memorials, and to final action only on governmetal appropriation measures; second period of ten days, convening third Monday in April following, to final consideratio of bills, resolutions and memorials, and prohibiting any amendment thereto, except upon four fifths vote of each house; fixing compensation of members at $3 per legislative day and limiting extra sessions of the legislature to subject matter of executive proclamations. All voters who have the best interests of the state in mind will support this measure.

Not many women smoke cigarettes, and probably those who do, wouldn't if they thought nobody objected to it. Women, like men, do many strange and sometimes unpleasant and unnecessary things in order to show that they are free.

One week from tomorrow is the day set for "going over the top." The following day there will be a big exodus for the headwaters of Salt Creek.

The political pot is beginning to boil and every candidate will have his thumb on the trigger bright and early Tuesday morning, November 2nd.

The man who apologizes for going to church always seems proud of the fact that his wife attends.

Anything in which there is "more truth than poetry," always seems to be disagreeable.

What is bitterer than the dregs at the bottom of the cup of revenge?

There will be some surprises—of course.

Engineer Scalded To Death by Steam

OREGON CITY, Or., Oct. 22.—Oscar Bair, engineer on the Southern Pacific extra freight No. 2560, was killed instantly at Parkplace today, when his engine and three cars telescoped and were thrown into the ditch after a flange on a gondola car had broken. Bair's engine was running as a helper, and was near the center of the train.

The gondola car was loaded with coal and was two cars ahead of the engine. This car was twisted and broken, while the other two cars that left the track, both wooden cars, one loaded with lumber and the other with flour, were completely demolished.

Bair was pinned under the wreckage and was scalded to death. B. A. McCall, the fireman, was thrown clear of the wreck, although the engine toppled on his side of the cab.

Attempt at Rescue Made.

Members of the crew declared that the train was making about 15 to 20 miles an hour when the accident occurred, but Mrs. K. Zielaskwski, who resides near the scene of the accident and who was an eyewitness, said it was running at a high rate of speed. Mrs. Zielaskwski was looking out of the window of her home at the time. She said that she saw the fireman thrown clear of the cab about 15 or 20 feet away and that he immediately ran back and attempted to shut off the steam that was scalding the engineer.

The truck of the gondola was torn loose from the car and the engine plowed on ahead of the coal car before it went over.

Fuel From Engine Spilled.

The engine was an oil burner and much fuel was spilled on the ground, but did not ignite.

Paul Praueger, another eyewitness of the accident, immediately rushed to the train, but he said the engineer was dead when he arrived. Bair was formerly a guard at the penitentiary, and leaves a family in Portland. The body was brought to the Holman & Pace undertaking establishment in this city, and McCall received medical attention here.

Trains were tied up in Oregon City all morning pending the removal of the wreck, the first going through at 1 p. m.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

A Desperate Situation.

I thought for a moment I was going to faint. Everything grew black before me when I saw that big tear in my stocking. I remembered that I had seen a tiny hole in the seam of my stocking that morning, but it was so small that I did not dream that it would reach such proportions. Probably the roll of bills in the stocking strained the seam and pulled it apart.

Frantically I looked about the dressing room before I realized how silly that was, and then it seemed to me that everything, except despair, had gone out of this world. I upbraided myself for doing such a foolish thing as to draw my money out of the bank.

Now I forgot everything, except the fact that I was in a strange town, penniless and alone.

I grew panic-stricken at the thought that I had no place to lay my head that night and not a cent in the world. A feeling of nausea swept over me and I staggered to a chair. The dressing room attendant came up to me and said:

"What is the matter, dearie?"

How I hate that word "dearie." I never hear it even now without that awful moment when I found my money was gone coming back to me.

Finally I managed to tell her that I had lost my money.

"Never mind," she said, "I'll give you a nickel to call your family on the telephone and they can come after you." I thanked her, but felt it impossible to enter into explanations. I managed to rise and bathe my face in cold water. While I was doing this the attendant was called to the door and I heard her say:

"Yes, I think the young lady is in here. She says she has lost her money."

My heart sank lower than ever at this. I realized that it was the waiter and that I owed for my dinner. The attendant came back and said:

"Your dessert is waiting, Miss."

"I don't want any dessert," I said somewhat wildly.

The woman looked at me suspiciously, I thought, as she said again:

"I will loan you the nickel to telephone your friends if you have lost your money."

"I haven't a relative in this city," I answered, "nor in the world, for that matter," I added to myself.

Until now I had not sounded the depths of that knowledge. In my despair I was about to ask the woman if she would loan me enough money to telegraph to Mr. Halsey when I heard another voice at the door asking for me.

The attendant said, "They want you, Miss."

Not knowing who "they" were and scarcely caring, I went forward. It seemed to me that nothing could be more trying than what I had already experienced in the last half hour, but more was to come. I found the waiter and a man with a peculiarly hard countenance awaiting me.

"The waiter seems to think you are ill, Miss. Can we be of any service to you?"

"I am not ill," I answered, "but I have lost all my money."

The waiter held out the bill for my dinner to the man. He scrutinized it carefully and then looked at me searchingly.

"You may use the house phone to telephone your friends," he offered.

Camel CIGARETTES

HOWDY PETE!

Philadelphia
—Tuesday.

Always learn something when I head into this old town. Passed my deck of Camels to a fine, business-looking citizen in the Pullman dressing room this morning and this opened up a conversation. Listen, Pete, that man talked the Camel language according to Hoyle!

"Camels are the very quintessence of cigarettes" said this party. Pete, get that word? It fits—it spreads the news—it spills the whole Camel story! And, if you don't get what I'm driving to you, look up the word in Webster's! Why, Uncle Dan put it there when he dreamed Camels were coming! That man slipped into one word:—mellow-mild-body, no cigaretty aftertaste, no cigaretty odor—and—the best cigarette in the world at any price!

Pete, why do you hear men of all types everywhere actually boosting Camels? That's because they know Camels are right! They know from Camels flavor that Camels have the quality—and—they know that Camels blend of choice Turkish and choice Domestic tobaccos makes the most delightful cigarette any man ever put between his lips!

Old oil well, I'm no gusher, but the way Camels are going to more and more men every one of the seven days in every week is a sight to see!

P. S.—Leaving for K. C. tonight housed as close to the roof as they could put me! Drop me a line care Hotel Baltimore.

Scarcity of Telephone Equipment

As new subscribers a number of individuals have recently placed orders with us for telephones. Old subscribers have asked for service at new locations. They have been told by our representatives that immediate compliance with their desires was impossible owing to lack of "telephone facilities" in a particular locality. "Why," one will say, "The poles and wires are on the street and the house is already wired."

We wish that the problem were as simple as it sounds. There may be poles and wires, but every wire may be in use in giving service to others. There may be a cable, but every circuit in it may be assigned to telephones already installed. There may be spare wires and circuits but no switchboard apparatus at the central office to which they can be connected. There may even be sections of switchboard but not available for operation on account of the lack of necessary accessories such as ringing keys, relays, etc.

The reason for the shortage of telephone equipment is simple. During the war period we were unable to maintain our reserve or stock plant as the same materials we use were required and taken for Government purposes and for industries properly favored by the Government. Since the war, with the unexpectedly prolonged problems of reconstruction, production and delivery of materials needed to meet even current demands have been delayed. Every business concern is having similar experiences. The manufacturers of telephone equipment have been bending every effort to fill our orders, but they in turn are meeting the same difficulties in securing rubber, paper, silk, glass, porcelain, tin, thread, shellac, metal parts and all other articles not generally associated in the public mind with telephone service.

At the same time with this abnormal situation with reference to materials there exists an unprecedented demand for telephone service, and even under these circumstances our record is one of fulfillment of demand. In the first eight months of this year we have added 6863 telephones in the State of Oregon. In the eight months prior to our declaration of war we gained 2655 telephones.

We desire to give service as much as a patron wishes to receive it. We desire to promptly comply with the suggestion of public authorities who have taken a proper interest in the situation. We are facing abnormal conditions but we will—of necessity—gradually overcome our difficulties.
