HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

A Proposal of Marriage.

"Now Ann, tell me all about it," said Jimmy Callahan as we seated ourselves in the rather somewhat secluded corner of the restaurant—the rival to the one in which I had been hat checker.

"Don't ask me, Jimmy. It's a long sad story."

"I know it, Ann dear. It makes me boil with rage when I think how unequal the game is with a girl and a man. It was hard enough for me to work my way up, but I have my foot on the first rung of the ladder now and I can make it all right for you from now on. It doesn't seem possible that you have been right here in the city and in as conspicuous a place as a popular restaurant while Kenneth nd Mr. Halsey have been hunting you frantically. I think Mr. Halsey would have been beside himself had he ot known that you had your money."

"But I did not have it," I interrupted before I thought.

"What do you mean you did not have it?" demanded Jimmy.

And then I had to tell Jimmy of all my foolishness. Jimmy did not act as though I had been silly. He just said: "You poor girl."

I came nearer loving Jimmy Callahan then than I did in my whole life.

"Well, it is all over now," he continued with masculine assurance.

"It's all over, now," Jimmy repeated. "I'll loo after you in the future. I am getting one hundred dollars a week with the National Advertising company, and they are sure to raise my salary at the end of the year. We will get married right away."

"No, Jimmy. I cannot do that."

"Don't you love me a little, Ann? I know of course, that you can never love me as I love you. Oh, Ann, my darling, you will never know what you have been to me. Why you have stood between me and all the temptations of man? I have kept myself clean because of you, and because I knew of the horror you would look upon me with, if I were anything else than what you would have me. Ann, try to love me a little I want you so. Why, ever since you went away to school, I have kept a foolish bit of verse that I wrote one day because I just had to give expression to my longing.

I gazed at Jimmy fascinated. His face was transfigured. It was not my childhood pal that I saw before me, but a man, who was looking at me as though I were the greatest desire in the world. Slowly a flush crept over his face and then receded, leaving him white and drawn. He handed me the paper across the table and I read:

TO ANN:—
Your smile to me is all the world, dear,
And Heaven the glance of your eye
My heart calls Ann, all the while dear,
Though at times my hopes faint and die.

Your hand in mine gives me a joy, dear,
No excess another might bring.
Your words are music to me dear,
More sweeter than Angels sing.

Though I stand outside your life, dear
And gaze on your face from afar,
Though another may call you, wife, dear,
You are my guiding star.

Jimmy held out his hand for the bit of verse and through a mist of tears. I looked into his eyes. Almost involuntarily my hand shot across the table and I could not help but think that to be the wife of a man who loved me as I knew Jimmy did, would bring happiness.

DAY OF SLIM WOMAN .

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 30—The slim woman is coming into her own. Close fitting gowns have been decreed by Dame fashion, and with the new fashion, it is impossible not to feel pity for the woman who is endowed by what what is politely called a "full habit." Small breakfasts and little lunches may help to over come the difficulty.

HONOR WOMEN JURORS.

ROCKVILLE, Ind.—When it came to respect for women and for the new law permitting women to sit on juries, the lawyers of this city let it be known that they stand second to none. They solved a knotty question of etiquette caused when twelve women were impaneled by appearing in full evening dress.

DYING DIG AT DOCTORS

GENEVA, Switzerland, Mme. Brusthein died at the age of 102 years as the result of a sting on the mouth by a wasp. She defeated doctors. She has always enjoyed good health. A doctor was called in to attend her and before dying said: "Death will not be due to the wasp, but to the doctor."

Beware of the complimentary vote! It is reported that a man on the democratic ticket is approaching some of the voters with the statement that he could hardly expect to be elected, but would like a "nice complimentary vote." Beware of the trick. Vote as you mean it!

Election day is Senator Harding's birthday. The American people will remember him with the handsomest birthday gift a man ever received, namely, the highest office on earth, the presidency of the United States. And yet, such is the character of the man as revealed by his record, that he will not accept that high office as a mere personal token, to be used according to the whims or caprice of selfish personal ambition, but as a great responsibility and a mighty trust.- When the sun goes down on Harding's birthday, it will be to rise on the morrow casting its beneficent beams upon a land forever freed from the direful shadow of one-man rule. Our country is about to receive a new birth of freedom.

When President Wilson stood before the United States Senate during the war pleading for a cause which he had suddenly chosen to advocate, he said: "It is MY duty to win the war." For that alleged reason he demanded that the Senate do his bidding, and yet the matter in hand had nothing to do with winning the war. Like a headstrong child he was simply seeking to have his own way. Had the winning of the war been entrusted to him alone? Had Congress and the common people of America no part, and were they not bearing their part? Had the four million men in the American uniform no part, and were they not bearing their part? What about the millions of lives and billions of treasure being expended by our allies across the water? Was Woodrow Wilson the one single instrument selected by providence for that mighty task? His course on that occasion harmonized with his later action as to the league of nations. His individual will must be set up against the judgment of all the leading statesmen of America. Has the great cause of peace in the world been committed to one man? And yet Governor Cox says he is in accord with the president, and the president is advocating his election. Can Cox go into office upon his promise to follow the president and then break that promise? He attempts to shift his ground now and then by saying he will stand for reservations. What reservations? The American Senate has defined its position and is deadlocked with the president. Cox says he will follow the president. Therefore, he must go against the Senate or break faith. What will he do? Is he for the Senate reservations or against them? He has never declared himself or given the language of the reservations or interpretations he would accept. The American people were deceived by a false slogan in 1916, namely, "He kept us out of war." They will not be fooled again.

Wilson did not keep us out of war, but he has made a pretty good stagger towards keeping us out of peace and out of smear.

A vote for Chamberlain is a vote for the democratic Underwood tariff law which is today allowing the country to be flooded with Canadian wheat and lumber, Australian wool and South American beef. A vote for Stanfield is a vote for the protection of American products and American labor. Voters, don't let any theorist fool you with the silly statement that the tariff is a dead issue. Vote for Stanfield as well as for Harding.

The men on the local republican ticket are growing in strength every day. They are men who will stay put, and they stand for republican principles. Compare them, man for man, with their opponents, and judge for yourself. Compare their political principles with those of their opponents. No one need be deceived.

Everybody do your best to get your neighbors to the polls!

The Democratic state central committee is conducting a secret and gum-shoe effort to defeat Judge George M. Brown for Supreme Justice. They have picked an obscure lawyer as a candidate and are writing letters asking voters to write his name in on the ballot, hoping that the Republican voters will be asleep at the switch and neglect to write in Judge George M. Brown's name. Judge Brown has no opposition in Republican ranks and has been endorsed by the Republican state central committee.

ROOSEVELT SUES EDITOR.

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—Franklin D. Roosevelt today filed papers in a suit for $500,000 against John R. Rathom, editor and publisher of the Providence Journal, and Scott C. Bone, and Edward B. Clark, manager and assistant manager of publicity for the Republican national committee. Mr. Roosevelt charges the defendants with circulating false and defamatory libel.

An editorial in the Providence Journal had sequestered or destroyed navy department records and that he had sought personally to return to the ships of the navy, men convicted of various crimes, he charged Mr. Roosevelt made public denial of the charges and then Mr. Rathom sent him a letter outlining specific cases referred to in the editorial. This letter was also published in the Providence Journal.
