Cox Will End His Campaign at Toledo

DAYTON, Nov. 1.—Governor Cox will close his campaign with a speech at Toledo tonight, because party followers there regarded his appearance in Toledo as good luck, asserting that his only chance of failure was his failure to end his speaking engagements in that city.

You are cordially invited to a card party at the Maccabee hall Thursday evening, Nov. 4. Come and have a good time. Refreshments served.

STRAW VOTE TAKEN.

A straw vote conducted by J. V. Starrett, in Glendale, Canyonville and Myrtle Creek, under similar conditions to that taken in Roseburg, resulted as follows: Harding 57, Cox 53, Debs 14; Chamberlain 51, Stanford 41; Eddy 49, McClintock 76; Starmer 48, Pearce 53; Stearns 43, Long 74; Lenox 58, Riddle 59; Fear 37, Wright 79.

NOW KNOWN TO BE CLOUDS

Up to Year 1900 the Projections on Mars Had Been Thought to Be Mountains.

The first observers of projections on Mars had attributed them to the same cause that produces projections on the moon—that is, mountains. Such they were said to be in France and at Lick. This view, however, was in 1892 disputed by W. H. Pickering, who considered them to be not mountains, but clouds. This view was supported by A. E. Douglass, who observed them in 1892 at Flagstaff, Ariz. The mountain theory of their generation was shown to be untenable and their ascription to clouds proved to be the correct theory in December, 1900. Only a single projection was visible in 1900, 1903 and 1905. As a mountain does not change its place, and as nothing was seen where something had been visible, the phenomenon was proved to not be a mountain peak. Now the only other thing capable of catching the light before it reached the surface would be something suspended in the air—that is, a cloud. Deductions, therefore, from the rarity of the phenomenon alone showed that the projections must be clouds. Furthermore, the projection was smaller after the lapse of 24 hours. The something that caused it was not only not attached to the soil, but was moving and dissipating as it moved along. Clouds are the only bodies known to us which account for these metamorphoses. Clouds, then, and not mountains, are the explanation of the projections of Mars—"Mars and Its Canals," by Percival Lowell.

LONG LOST USE OF WINGS

Ground Parrot, Found Only in New Zealand, Interesting to the Student of Evolution.

The wingless birds of New Zealand are particularly interesting to the nature student as illustrating the process of evolution. None but in their native land could these birds have survived, and, therefore, nowhere else would they have become wingless. New Zealand is the only region on earth where there are no destructive animals. Being unable to fly, the birds could not, of course, have escaped from any swift hunting animals such as abound in all other lands. It is interesting to note that the kakapo, or ground parrot, once had the use of its wings, but being a grass seed feeder and finding no enemies on the ground gradually ceased to fly and eventually lost the use of its wings entirely, though it can run very swiftly. These birds are so gentle and so unconscious of having any enemies that if a person sits down near one and keeps quiet it will presently tuck its head under its wing and go to sleep. The kakapo breeds but once in two years, and the mother bird carefully hides the nest from her mate, though why she does so is unknown, the male showing no desire to harm the eggs or young birds. In this infrequent breeding is demonstrated nature's thoughtfulness—having no destructive enemies the kakapo would multiply to too great numbers if the breeding season occurred as frequently as with other birds.

Woman Water Carrier.

The "feliaba," the woman water carrier, for centuries an institution in the Holy land, is threatened with extinction because of the use of water carts, growing popular through the demands of sanitary measures.

The picturesque water-carrier, gliding along the streets in her colorful costume, with a vase of water balanced on her head, may soon become a memory.
