

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

Jerome Hathaway Calls.

"I wish I could have your confidence, Mamie."

"It's confidence, its knowledge," said Mamie.

"But now you must go to bed, Ann, or that precious Ken of yours who deserves all the bad luck that's coming to him for not appreciating you, will discover a wrinkle about your pretty eyes tomorrow, or a paleness of cheek that will move him to withhold a compliment or two that you'll be wanting him to give you."

"Don't you like Ken, Mamie," I asked wistfully.

"Jimmy Callahans little finger is worth more than the whole of Ken's body," she answered.

I had a distinct feeling that what Mamie said was true, and I told myself that I was foolish for not trying to return in greater measure the love that Jim had offered me, particularly as I was sure that Ken in his irresponsible way would never look upon me as anything but his childhood pal.

I quickly undressed and crept into bed, and it did not seem that I had been asleep ten minutes when Mamie awakened me.

"You must get up dear, for Jerry Hathaway has just telephoned that he will be over in about three quarters of an hour to take you to luncheon somewhere."

"You'll go with us won't you, Mamie?"

"What! Me? Are you crazy? Do you think I would jeopardize my reputation by going to lunch with the son of my employer?"

"Do you mean to tell me, Mamie, that Jerry Hathaway's father owns the place where you and I worked?"

"Yes, he owns that restaurant, and several others in town."

"Why is it we never saw him in there?"

"He doesn't come in very often, I'll say that for him," said Mamie. In fact, I think he's a pretty decent sort of a chap according to his lights but now I remember that I haven't seen him around there as much as he was before you came I'll bet he stayed away because he knew you were there."

"Do you think he asked about my losing my money?" I asked suddenly, growing suspicious of something I knew not what.

"I can't tell," answered Mamie. "He's liable to have known it and then again, he's liable not to. However, we'll give him the benefit of the doubt, because it seems to me that I know Jerry Hathaway too well to know that he would not have kept that money from you had he known that you had lost it."

"Well, dear, if it would smash your reputation to go to dinner with him, then I oughtn't to go."

"No, Ann, don't you see that you and I are different. Anyone seeing you with Jerry Hathaway would know that you were raised under better conditions than he; and last night all of his crowd were made aware of it. Jerry Hathaway may be proud to be seen with you, but if I should go with him, there would be only one construction put upon it."

The bell rang, and Jerry stood in the doorway as I opened it. I turned, but Mamie had disappeared.

"My, but you're looking lovely, Ann," he said. "I'm going to make all the fellows envious by taking you to the smartest place in town."

"Does that mean, Jerry, that you would not take me there if I did not look nice?"

Jerry had the grace to blush as he answered honestly, "I expect it means that, but why quibble. You know as well as I get it is the good looking girls who get the motor rides, the theatre and the flowers."

"But, Jerry, my mother said that it was not beauty but brains and goodness that set a girl up apart from the rest."

"That's what it does," said Jerry with a laugh. "The brainy girls and the goody-goody girls of today are set too far apart for us fellows to get them very often. However, that will never happen to you Ann, the thing that will trouble you will be keeping us away from you."

LONG LOST ROMAN CARVING

Story of the Rediscovery of a Lost Treasure, Now in British Museum.

A remarkably beautiful specimen of Roman sepulchral carving has just been added to the British museum through the generosity of Ernest Dixon. The story of the rediscovery of this treasure is romantic. Mr. Dixon acquired it from a contractor in London, in whose yard it had been lying for some fifty years. He placed his purchase so as to form the central feature of a rock garden in Putney, but afterward struck by its unusual beauty, brought it to the notice of the British museum authorities, who identified it as a genuine and long lost antique, says the Boston Transcript. The sculpture is a marble relief, over five feet long by nearly two feet wide. It shows three draped busts set in a deeply recessed panel. It was a monument to Lucius Ampullus Philomusus, and the busts depict himself, his wife and his daughter. The relief is not a part of a sarcophagus, but is a slab built originally into the wall of a tomb. Its date is probably between B. C. 25 and A. D. 25.

The sculpture is first mentioned by Bianchini of Verona, who was copying Roman inscriptions between 1708 and 1715. It had been excavated probably about 1700, near the Porta Capena and was taken to the Villa Casali. Seen and noted on more than one occasion during the eighteenth century, the last copyist to mention it was George Zoega, who was established at Rome between 1784 and 1809. After this the relief became lost to the world. It was perhaps shipped home by some traveling Englishman, who placed it in his house or garden in the St. John's wood region, and thence it found its way to the contractor's yard from which it has now been rescued.

FAVORED CLASS IN RUSSIA

Only Actresses Are Permitted by Government to Wear Shoes and Finery.

There is only one favored class in Russia today, according to a Paris correspondent. Strangely enough, this class is composed entirely of women. They are the theatrical stars and beauties. They alone are permitted the wearing of rich garments and the possession of jewels. The Russians have always been passionate lovers of the theater, and, even under the present regime they treat their stage favorites as so many reigning queens. Incidentally, the actresses are the only women in Russia today who are permitted to wear shoes during warm weather. The peasant women of Russia always went barefoot during the summer months. Hence Russians regard bare feet as the distinguishing mark of the woman of the people. Any woman who affects to wear shoes in Russia nowadays, unless she be a favorite of the footlights, is regarded as a daughter of the despised "bourgeoisie." She is considered a fair target for insult and persecution. Even the wives of soviet dignitaries, such as Trotsky and Lenin, have been obliged to bow to popular sentiment. They may be seen any day in Moscow tripping through the streets barefoot.

The Firefly's Light.

Fame and fortune await the scientist who discovers the secret of the familiar firefly or lightning bug. No one has been able to tell how the little insect produces the flashes of light we see twinkling about on dark nights. Careful scientific tests have proven, however, that this light is produced with about one four-hundredths part of the energy which is expended in the flame of a candle. Considering the strength or rather feebleness of the firefly this light is believed to be the most efficient form of illumination to-day. If this method could be understood and put to work it is calculated that the energy exerted by a boy in driving a bicycle would be sufficient to run a powerful dynamo or light miles of street lamps. The light of the firefly is practically heatless and it is believed among scientists that the future of the lighting industry of the world depends upon the discovery of heatless light.—Boys' Life.

A la Carte.

After a trip from Gary to Michigan City over the roughest road I have ever seen, I felt the need of a good dinner.

I didn't see any place to eat, and so called out to a newsboy who stood near on the curbing. "Hey, there, do you know where I can get some good food?"

"Sure," he said, "follow me."

So saying, he hopped on to his bicycle and we followed. Where? To a hot dog wagon!

Fitting Revenge. Wood—I understand some one stole your automobile? Park—You are right. "That's pretty low down, isn't it?" "Yes. There's just one thing I wish."

"What's that?" "I hope the thief keeps it as long as I did and he'll go flat broke."—Youngstown Telegram.

Love or Money. "I intend to marry for love," said the girl with the dreamy eyes. "You are wise, my dear," replied her dearest friend. "Men with money are often so hard to please."—London Answers.
