same, a game that is unusual in its every detail, and yet quite simple, one naturally becomes interested. The game of "Pollyanna" in other words, the game of being glad has swept this country from coast to coast, and it has gotten such a stronghold upon the people that they have gone so far to exclaim that "If there was a 'Pollyanna' in every house hold, we would in time, be able to close half of our hospitals and reformatories and sanitariums—half of our medical schools and drug stores, and we would put half of our physicians and lawyers out of practice.

For that reason, Mary Pickford, who will appear in the screen version of "Pollyanna" at the Astoria theatre for the last time tonight was recently asked about this wonderful "glad game." The picture is Miss Pickford's first independently produced picture for the United Artists Corporation.

"Pollyanna" is playing a game," remarked Miss Pickford, "and the glad game" doesn't mean that we are to rejoice because we have a broken leg or because people are starving somewhere or because we have a war as no one but an idiot would smile over evil. No, it just means that we are to look around and to find the things that there are to be glad of and to make the best of those."

Violet Heming, the brilliant stage and screen star who is appearing at the Majestic theatre for the last time tonight in the elaborate production, "Everywoman" regards the success or failure of a large scale artistic venture such as the filming of the famous morality play, as a commentary upon the public's taste in motion pictures.

"It is a lamentable fact," said Miss Heming recently, "that some of the pictures exploited with semi-aggressive advertising have packed theatres when the productions themselves were stupid and far from being up to their press notices in their naughtiness even. When a big, clean beautiful product of art like "Everywoman" comes along, it deserves the support of every right thinking motion picture patron. Its success will encourage producers to make more like it. Its failure would be an indication to them that the people didn't like pictures that have an uplifting influence on the screen. The temptation would be to return to the cheap tawdry stuff, that the right kind of advertising can get over him. However, the wonderful success of "Everywoman" as a stage play shows what the public thinks of it, and is an excellent that the screen version will be just as enthusiastically received."

Movie Closeups

No picture in many months has given Tom Mix, the daredevil cowboy star, working under the Fox banner, a better opportunity to display his daredevilry and horseman ship than "The Untamed," which began a two-day run at the Liberty theatre last night, and which will be shown for the last time tonight. Had the picture been written for Mix it could not have served its purpose to a better advantage. "The Untamed" was adapted to the screen by H. P. Keller from the well known novel of Max Brand, and was made under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn, who worked with Mix for the first time.

A most unusual angle of the picture is the appearance of a horse and dog that were especially trained for the important parts they play. As persons who have read the book remember, the interest centers on a strange, almost super natural man, who spends his time in the solitary wastes of the west; a fiery horse and a wolf dog for companions. The man understands the language of all beasts, and through his nature runs a strong and primitive strain of the wilderness. His uncanny power gives him mastery over man and beast.

The leading woman for Mix is Pauline Stark, who has risen to high favor in the motion picture public through her work in many big photodramas. A startling romance lends a charm to the story.

Obregon Receives Many Visitors

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 3.—In a tiny rudely furnished office on the second floor of a building undergoing repairs, General Alvaro Obregon, as President-elect has received daily hundreds of men and women who came here to plead their cause with him before his inauguration. Most of them were office seekers and the claimants of political favor, and they spent long hours waiting to tell to General Obregon in what particular way they had helped him in his ascendancy and why they should be rewarded. Their numbers were so great that the President-elect was at his office seven hours a day, seven days a week, and most of his time was consumed in a patient hearing of claims.
 Following an arduous campaign which culminated in his overwhelming election last September, General Obregon came to Mexico City and established headquarters in the office of a vendor Medera, where his candidacy was conducted. The office, small at best was divided by a cloth partition into a private sanctum for the general and his personal quarters for his several secretaries.

Outside there were several ante chambers, which, from 9:30 o'clock in the morning when the President-elect arrived, until 7 o'clock in the evening, with a couple of hours off for lunch, were crowded with people.

There were numerous doors to pass before the inner sanctum is entered, and at each stood two guards who questioned closely all comers. Those with apparent legitimate reasons for their presence were allowed to proceed, the others were turned back to join in the line, were present through in the corridors.

General Obregon has been quoted as saying that one of the contributing elements to Mexico's unrest has been the popular belief that a successful political candidate must reward every one of his supporters. He has described the system as being pernicious, because, in the event that such awards are not forthcoming, the erstwhile supporter becomes an enemy and sows the seed of discontent and trouble. It is his wish, it is said, to abolish the practice of such awards and to allow the president absolute freedom in the choice of his servants, at least to the extent that failure to reward substantially every man who was his helper now not means possible revolutions.

That the hundreds who gathered outside his office daily knew nothing of his policies, or if they did, they held on in the hope that exceptions would be made, because their numbers never diminished despite the seven hours of conferences which the President-elect held every day. Some of them apparently have no other occupation. By way of diversion, General Obregon provided a band which gave daily concerts in the court yard.

Mrs. S. K. Bradley and Miss Nellie Hough, who have been visiting here at the G. W. Ryan residence, left last night for California where they will spend the winter. They reside in the Black Hills country in South Dakota.
