

Camel CIGARETTES

Dallas, Texas, Sunday,

DEAR OLD BOY PETE!

This corner of the U. S. mainland is so wonderful in its bigness and bustle I guess I go mouth wide open and eyes staring! Why, Pete, Texans don't talk in miles—it doesn't mean anything! They'll tell you that this place, or that, is an all-day trip, or two days and a night distant, etc. And, old yardstick, you've got the feet, just let it sink in deep that Texas is not only over 800 miles wide but it is our fifth state in population!

Heard a bird in the Adolphus Hotel say that when he comes off the west border he figures he's close home to Baltimore when he's across the Lone Star State! Talk about "jumps"! Try a few, say the one between Texarkana and El Paso!

Pete, everything grows big down here—business as well as folks' hearts! I like the way they never forget! Here I was walking on Main Street yesterday when as fine a type of man as ever wore one of those broad Texas smiles came up to me. "How are you, lieutenant?" says he. "Maybe you'll call back that day at Camp Dick when I brought over that bunch of Camel Cigarettes for the boys," he continued. Right then a Camel conference opened!

Golly, Pete, this party coins Camel compliments faster than the mint makes money! "Lieutenant," says he, "I know when I'm 'set'! I've smoked cigarettes for five years! (NOW LISTEN, PETER!) I know Camels and I know their marvellous mild, mellow body and refreshing flavor and wonderful Turkish and Domestic blend! A million Camels wouldn't tire a smoker's taste!" Now, Pete, I'll say that's some testifying!

Sincerely

Shorty.

P. S.—Between you and me I'll be gazing at tall buildings and things around 43d and Broadway—N-E-W Y-O-R-K—about the hour this note hits Boston's Back Bay! Write me at the same old stand!

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

A Surprising Letter.

Mr. Halsey never asked me to go to the house again. I know, though, that he was worried over its extravagance, especially as Ken had asked him in two or three letters lately to advance him money. Every time that Ken asked for money, Mr. Halsey sent it to him, but every time he sent it he used words more forcible than polite about his son's wife.

One morning as I was sorting out the letters, I came across three letters, one from Kenneth and one with an African postmark—the writing upon which I had never seen before—and one from a firm of well known lawyers with whom I know Mr. Halsey was not doing business.

Some way they gave me a little nervous chill, but resolutely I put them aside until I had finished all of the other letters, many of which I could answer myself without troubling Mr. Halsey about them.

At last I reached the end of the correspondence, with the exception of the three letters on the side of my desk. I opened Ken's and found that he had enclosed two bills, one for $5000 and one for $3000, which he asked his father to pay, saying:

"I know I am wearing out your good nature, dad, but this, I assure you, will be the last, for we are coming back next week and these are, I understand, the last two bills upon the house.

"Now that she knows the house is finished, Grace is quite as eager to get back as she was to stay here. We have had a long bridal trip, dad. We have been gone over a year, you know, and when I left I thought we would be back within a month surely. I told Grace this morning that when we arrived back home she would have to consider our honeymoon over, because I would have to buckle down to work and pay back the money you have advanced me. I am afraid I shall have hard work to make Grace understand that I am not to be always at her beck and call. I thought when her mother arrived that things would be quieter down here, as far as we were concerned, but Mrs. Cameron is even more anxious to be going all the time than Grace. I think the only thing that can possibly settle Grace would be children, but whenever I mention it she flies into a rage and asks me if I want to spoil her life by tying her up in a nursery.

"I tried to explain to her that most young women that marry cheerfully, even eagerly, go through this 'spoiling period,' as she calls it, and I added that I thought it quite necessary for us to carry on the family name and that it would not be right to you not to do so.

"Grace gave me quite a tongue lashing at this and inquired whether I had married her merely for children.

"I confess I became angry at this and reminded her that I had no recollection of the time when I married her.

"Then she went into hysterics. "Dad, have you ever seen a woman in hysterics? If you have not, I want to tell you they are fearsome things. Of course, it ended in my capitulating. A man always does, you know, and truly, as Grace lay there on the bed, so white and spent, after her paroxysm of hysteria, I felt myself a brute and I told her that I would never speak of a family again.

"I am ashamed to write you this letter, dad, but as you spoke of children to carry on your name in your last letter, I want you to know just how I feel about it and why it is very probable that you will never have grandchildren about your knees."

I, too, felt ashamed as I read this confidential missive. I knew that Ken had never expected anyone to see it but his father, and I felt like telling Mr. Halsey that it was not fair to his son to show me these private letters. Later, I came to the conclusion that it was better to say nothing about it. When Mr. Halsey read this letter, which he did soon after I had read it and before I had time to open the one with the African postmark, I saw tears roll down his cheeks.

"Grace Cameron," I said to myself, "you have much to answer for."

"Tomorrow—Bob Whitson, Ann's Father.
