HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDA H. McCLONE GIBSON

Before and After Marriage.

"I am so glad that you came out with Ann, Grace," exclaimed Ken as he shook hands with her all.

"Yes, doesn't it seem good, Ken, to be with old friends once more," answered Grace amiably.

"How does she dare do it?" I asked myself, and then I understood perfectly that she dared because she knew that Jerry and Jim and I were too conventional to give her away. I also understood that she was clever enough and quick enough to make her choice between her husband and his father and us. She didn't particularly care what we thought of her; she only wanted to use us when necessary and she knew that she could do this because we all were so fond of Ken that we did not want to hurt him, but she did understand that she must stand in with Mr. Halsey, Sr.

I have sometimes wondered what is the kindest thing for one's friends to do in such a case. The husband or the wife is the last to learn that which each should be first to know. And yet, after all, do we save anyone anything by not telling them the truth? Perhaps if one of us had said that Grace had come out to dine with Sellers, instead of with us, that night, many things that happened afterward might have been averted in the bud. However, one must do the thing that seems best at the time and let the future take care of itself. I determined to talk to Grace instead of Ken.

"I have been telling these dear friends of ours," said Grace sweetly, turning to Ken, "what I have found out about marriage in the short time that you and I have been wedded."

"And what was it?" said Mr. Halsey.

"It is this," said Grace, turning to him with a little smile. "I am trying to make those unmarried people understand that before marriage the most important thing to a man seems to be a girl's complexion and the way she combs her hair, but after marriage a man thinks more of altering his wife's taste in friends, or improving his mind, or teaching her domestic economics. In short, I have been giving them the benefit of our experience, Ken, and told them what no unmarried person seemed to know, and that is a sweetheart and a wife are two altogether different persons."

"Say, Ken," said Jerry, "why has your wife turned cynical so abruptly?"

"Is she cynical?" asked Ken with an innocence that was too apparent. "I have to confess that Grace's complexion and the way she combs her hair doesn't really interest me as much as it used to do. I expect, my dear," he said, turning to his wife with gentle courtesy, "that it is because I know now that your complexion will always be impeccable and your hair perfectly dressed."

I could not keep my glance from wandering to the place behind Grace's ear where the curl used to be. It was not there. It seemed to me that she had carefully drawn it up out of sight.

"I still keep to my first premise," I said, "and that is when I grow old I am going to hire someone to flatter me, for, even with Ken's courtesy, you can see that husbands cannot always be relied upon."

"I do not understand when we can hire people to cater to our appetite, to give us massages and medicine and keep our digestion as well as our muscles in condition, to preach to us and read to us and call us and dress us and make us beautiful, why we cannot find someone whom we can hire to give us food for our souls, save for our vanity, medicine for our ego, when such service is needed. Each of you know that the best cosmetic in the world is happiness. You also know, I venture, from your experience that one cannot be happy when one's self esteem is withered and one's self respect is dead. I am seriously afraid that the woman who marries thinking to listen to words of sweet flattery for the rest of her natural life, will be apt to wake one morning facing the cold, hard truth."

"Ann talks like a scorned old maid, doesn't she, Jim?" asked Jerry.

"Nothing of the kind," I answered. "I am not scorned, but I don't have to be married to know how much easier it is to put up with a man's idiosyncrasies if the man is not your husband. Likewise I am satisfied that it is easier for a man to flatter any other woman than his wife."

"I'll tell you what let's do, Jerry," said Jim. "Let's open a school for husbands and wives. We could have a special course in flattery, and we could teach it with a chart in which we can show all the weak spots in a man's egotism that a woman treads on every day of her life."

"You might have recipes for compliments as well as for pies," said Mr. Halsey, entering into the spirit of the game.

"I would ask for a well-defined system for keeping a man's devotion and his desire to make a woman happy," said Grace.

"That," answered Ken, and I fancied that there was a little bitter tang to his voice, "could be done only by going back to Ann's first idea and just spreading on the flattery thickly."

"I have never asked you to flatter me," said Grace quickly.

"Perhaps not in words," answered

Beauty Secrets for Women

A woman's fondest hope is to stay young. She often resorts to paints, powders and cosmetics to hide her years. Some women pay large sums to so-called "Beauty Doctors" in the belief that money will buy youth. Others wear girlish dresses, thinking they can fool the world about their age. But no one is deceived. The more you try to hide your age, the more it shows.

There is but one thing that hides old age back, and that is health. Sickness and weakness bring old age early in life. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a building-up medicine for women. It makes them healthy and strong when they suffer from women's troubles. It keeps them looking young by keeping them well. It is a woman's tonic for the frail, the delicate and those who are nervous, dizzy and who have headache and dragging pains. Favorite Prescription is altogether vegetable and without a particle of alcohol. It is safe to take. Try it now. In tablet or liquid form at all druggists, or send 10c for trial package of the tablets to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y.

Ken, "but I surely understand that if I do not compliment you in and out of season I know that you can find many other men to do so."

I thought it was time to break up the party, and pushed back my chair. Tomorrow—Ann's Quindary.
