HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

Mamie's Success.

The unexpected always happens.

I went to bed the night after my talk with Mamie, my mind teeming with thoughts and plans, and woke up the next morning in such agonizing pain that I had thoughts of nothing except my poor body.

"You have a very bad case of neuritis," said the doctor. "Your nerves are shattered. You must have complete rest and quiet for at least three weeks. If you were not so young, I would say six months, but if you follow my instructions I think I can promise that you will be all right in less than a month."

"But doctor," I began with the usual expostulations, "I cannot give up my work for that time."

"My dear girl, you are not indispensable to anyone or anything on this earth," was his quiet response, which silenced me immediately.

Under the capable management of Mamie I was installed in a pleasant room at a hospital, a quiet white-capped nurse attending. There was a No Admittance card on the door, and strict orders were given to my nurse that even Mamie might not see me for more than five minutes a day, and then not one word about business or friends who would disturb me should be spoken. Every other person of my acquaintance was barred from my room for the whole time I was at the hospital.

For three weeks I lay there in a flower decorated room, the sun streaming through the windows and, while at first I fussed and fumed greatly, after the first few days I began to see how much good the enforced rest was doing me and permitted myself to be cared for as if I were a helpless child.

Mamie came each day to see me, usually laden with flowers and with a message of cheer from my other friends. She did not mention Grace or her mother, except to say one day that Mrs. Cameron had gone out of town for a long visit, and was expected to go to Europe.

Evidently she decided that she ought not have said that much, for she dropped the subject there. I had been forbidden to ask questions, but I did break the rule one day, asking if my father had come or if Mr. Halsey heard any more from him. Mamie answered "no" to each question, and said that if Mr. Halsey received a letter or if he should make his appearance she would let me know.

Each day she told me about herself and how well she was getting along with "the show." "I have been given a tiny part which includes a song," she said. "Do you want me to sing it to you? The doctor said I might if you cared to have me."

I eagerly asked her to sing, for Mamie has a beautiful voice. "I often went without food, but I always found money for my singing lessons every week," she told me one day.

"You see, Ann, in the show I am supposed to be a very poor little girl, who looks out from her need to the luxury of another girl, who seems to have everything. And as I sit by the window a ray of sunshine slants across and I sing this little verse:

"There's a ray of sunshine streaming over there,
While I sit in shadows seeming full of care.
But its shimmer on the leaves
And that field of golden sheaves
Helps me bear,
For thank God my eyes can see it over there
Where its bit of golden radiance seems a prayer
That it will my shadows kiss
Change their sorrow into bliss everywhere."

I was silent after she had finished. The composer of the music had worked with rare artistry and feeling. It was a gem, something unique in a musical comedy. "Who had the originality and courage to introduce a song like that into musical comedy?" I exclaimed.

Mamie blushed, as she answered, "You see, Mr. Callahan—Jim—wrote the words and I set it to music."

"Mamie!" I exclaimed in surprise.

"Yes," she continued, "it simply just sung itself out of my heart onto my lips, and it was very easy to set down the notes. I have studied composition, you know. The next thing was to get a sad little song like this introduced into the show," she said with a smile. "Of course the manager and everyone connected with cors said it would kill the whole act. Finally Jim told Jerry Hathaway about it, and I sang it for him. Then Jerry bet the manager a hundred dollars it would go big. Well, it did. After that the manager was wild over it. Wasn't Jerry fine to help me that way?

"Jim and Jerry had all their friends there the first night. The critics say that the song has not only made me, but the show."

"Oh, I am so glad, Mamie. And I know you and Jim will make a lot of royalties on the song."

"Jim told me to tell you that it was going fine and"—here Mamie stopped and hesitated a moment—"that I have made the hit of the season and he is sure that I will have a leading part in the next show."

"I am so glad," I repeated, and before I could say more Mamie said, "I must run, and if this long seance does not hurt you, I'll stay longer and talk more tomorrow."

Will Oregon Pay For Its Telephone Service?

The Telephone Company is asking the State of Oregon for an increase in telephone rates. As shown by the following figures taken from an exhibit just filed with the Public Service Commission, it is now and for some years past has been operating at a loss.

Gross Revenue, Expense and Net Revenue Years 1916-1919, Inclusive, Actual; Year 1920---9 months actual, 3 months estimated.

	Year 1916	Year 1917	Year 1918	Year 1919	Year 1920 (3 MONTHS ESTIMATED)
Gross Revenue	$2,269,082.69	$2,552,351.15	$2,809,304.05	$3,445,848.83	$4,156,700
Expenses	2,004,011.32	2,342,401.99	2,568,314.02	3,482,614,97	4,126,600
Difference	265,071.37	209,949.16	240,990.03	(loss)36,766.14	30,100
Interest and Dividends to be paid out above Difference	514,778.65	549,064.85	594,675.33	653,412.82	721,500
Deficit	249,707.28	339,115.69	353,685.30	690,178.96	691,400

With such results it is not possible to develop or satisfactorily maintain a telephone plant. Such a showing to the investor will not enable us to obtain the outside funds necessary for extensions and permanent improvements.

Oregon must and will grow. To play its part in this growth the Telephone Company must have added revenue.

We are asking for rates which will enable us to pay a reasonable return on our investment. Adequate rates are necessary to adequate service.
