Movie Closeups

Moore, famous Goldwyn star, is featured in an overwhelming manner in the office of Mayor of the Hardiston. In the latest of a picture, which comes to theaters Sunday only. In Chase, Jr., the good-natured, energetic son of Chase Sr., as in hopes of winning the city race Tom Moore will more than delight you with his ability to interpret the role which is so to his winning personality. Chase, Jr., is elected to the office of Mayor of the town by an unknown to him, so that the scheme was planned by political who thought it to slip Chase's Sr., political lions in the bud before he becomes powerful and asserted the which he threatened to yield. Over, as a serious question of the men who were Wint's agents, thought they had an immense joke on old man

Chase, and the young man who held office was characterless enough to be a tool in their hands. See the disappointment those men suffered. The young man, to whom "responsibilities" simply meant a word in the dictionary, took advantage of the power he held.

Constance Talmadge proves that a woman can get anything she wants if she only knows how to go about it, as you will see in "Two Weeks" a picture taken from "At the Barn" Anthony Wharton's play, which will be shown at the Antlers Saturday only.

Miss Talmadge, as Lillums a show girl, flees from an escort who has been rude and winds up at the home of three crusty old bachelors. The grave old butler is horrified when she puts in her appearance and tells her that no women are allowed on the premises. Nothing daunted, she then shows him a slight thorn bruise and pretends to be suffering.

The butler falls at once and in his sympathy takes her up to the bathroom, to bathe and bind up the wound. Then Lillums is caught by the owners who are shocked at the very thought of her intrusion. But a flirt smile and a toss of the head wins two of them to her cause and she settles down for a visit. But the third bachelor? Well, she vanps him plenty before her two weeks are up. It is the story of a chorus girl who wins her way to stardom, and then gives up the stage—because she has found something more to her liking.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

Mr. Halsey's Fears.

"Why don't you make Grace a present of the coat, Mr. Halsey. They say it is worth the money and you can afford it," I said with a boldness I did not feel.

He swung around in his chair and faced me. "Would you have me encourage her in this ruinous extravagance?" he demanded with a note of surprise and anger in his voice. "No, Mr. Halsey," I replied, "but don't you think that if you would go to Grace and tell her that Ken has not the means to warrant such luxury that you might persuade her to turn over a new leaf? Then you could smooth it over by presenting her the coat. Surely she never had so much money before. She must know how to economize."

"I do not think it is possible, my dear. Her birth, education and environment have all contributed to make her a most selfish woman."

"What do you mean, Mr. Halsey, by birth, education and environment?" "In the first place, Ann, her father was one of the most selfish as well as one of the handsomest men I have ever known. He married Mrs. Cameron when she was very young and dissipated most of her fortune. I think she would have divorced him if she had not had a feeling that it would be doing a wrong to Grace. But I am sure that she often wished that he were dead. So I cannot find it in my heart to utterly condemn her for making Grace as heartless as she has when I think of the long years of martyrdom that she endured at her husband's hands."

"Grace has many of his characteristics, and seeing with what contemptuous tolerance her father passed over her mother's greatest sacrifices she grew to regard her mother as her father did—as someone whose only object in life was to minister to the comfort of her father and herself."

"Grace has always wanted the most extravagant things—things that would enhance her beauty; and her mother, growing weary of the long struggle, has come to helping her to get them, oftentimes in a way that showed lack of principle. In this way Mrs. Cameron has broken down any stability of character that the girl might have had. Mrs. Cameron has much to answer for when Grace's faults are enumerated."

"Her environment, you know, has always been that of wealth. Her friends have always had much more money than she, and her mother impressed upon her that the only way that she could have all the luxury she wished was to make an advantageous marriage. All her education was to that end. She must marry a wealthy man, with love, if possible, but without love if necessary. Money was a necessity; love only a transient desire. Ken was the richest young man Grace knew and having captured him she is now having her fling. But even I cannot indulge her in the lavish luxury to which her overweening selfishness carries her. She is always on the lookout for a new thrill."

"If she were a woman who did not have to be more or less careful of her reputation she would rush in to some scandalous love intrigue. Indeed, I am afraid that after she has wrung dry all sensation and her power to satisfy her most extravagant whims has ceased to thrill her, she will look around for something else to fill her jaded emotions. Oh, Ann, I cannot understand how it is possible, with you right beside her, that Ken fell in love with Grace."

"I felt the color suffuse my face as I stammered: 'Surely, Mr. Halsey, you must know that beauty is love's greatest lure and Grace is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen.' 'Beauty may be a lure of love, but I have never known beauty, alone, to be a successful basis for a really happy marriage.'

"Beside," Mr. Halsey continued, "you, too, are a very beautiful young woman and you should not disparage yourself."

"I never do, Mr. Halsey. I know that I am reasonably good looking and I think that it is mock modesty for a pretty woman to deny her charm. I am much against that old Victorian idea which says: 'Let the other person do all the praising of yourself.' I think self-recognition of physical beauty and mental gifts is necessary to self-respect."

Program Well Attended Today

The Farmer Week program yesterday was well attended, there being a large number of fruit growers at the court house in the morning to hear the address of Clayton Lons the sessions were also held this afternoon by the Oregon Grower's Co-operative association. Club work was also interestingly discussed by H. A. Seymour and A. E. Street. The annual meeting of the Farm bureau was held today, at which time the reports were read, officers were elected and other items of business were discussed. In the afternoon Chester Gray of Missouri, was present and made the principal address. Mr. Gray has formerly been in this city, and many availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing him again. A program was given in connection with the afternoon meeting.

Respectfully Inscribed in Memory of OLARA ELIZABETH JOHNS

She was born at Levant, Maine, June 5, 1854. She married T. B. Johns in Kansas in 1873.

Mr. Johns and 10 children survive. They located in Cow Creek valley in 1890, and during the intervening years the Johns family have been a prominent and most eminent part of this valley and city.

By a mysterious summons from the mysterious guardians of the great unknown, Mrs. Johns has passed on from our midst and has halted the invisible door that sooner or later we all must signal, and with that peculiar courage that has distinguished women of various epochs of our own world history.

Mrs. Johns, knowing that her case was incurable, calmly arranged every detail of her burials and made definite arrangements for her demise, in which very request was carried out. Her three daughters, Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. Chadwick, and Miss Lila Johns were to prepare her body for the tomb; six of her sons were to act as pallbearers, and the other son was to tenderly care for his father at the services. The sons are Thomas Champion, Richard Shepard, Oscar H., Chester B., Leland S., Edison L., and Frank C. The effect was soul inspiring. The sons carried their idolized mother to its last resting place. All were impressed by the occasion, and at the clear vision of the dying mother, who could so calmly and hopefully meet the last foe of our race with all her beloved ones going with her. As they return to their saddened home, they will emulate her courage and cherish her beautiful sentiments, and live on—knowing that mother is waiting "Over There" to welcome her dear ones to the mansions prepared.

At home you will miss her when you see the vacant chair; you will listen for her footsteps in vain. Her hallowed presence has passed beyond your ken—mother is gone—the tired hands are folded in snowy grace upon the peaceful slumbering breast.

As you inscribe her name on spotless marble, and cover her grave with the fairest of flowers, the gentle sighs of sweet spring time will chant for her a tender requiem—

"Earth cannot pay her debt for all the love that she has given; but Thou, Dear Lord, will not forget her; reward; bless her in her home in Heaven."

—Fannie Roberts Miller.
