WOOLING THE RHINELAND.
 The Germans accuse the French of trying to lure away the Rhine provinces, taking undue advantage of their present military occupation. The appeal is cultural as well as political. The French are said to be giving French plays and concerts and doing their best in every way to persuade the native population that it would be better off permanently under the French flag.

It is natural enough for the Germans beyond the Rhine, particularly the Prussians, to feel aggrieved at this propaganda. As long, however, as the French do not resort to coercion of any kind, there is certainly nothing criminal about it. If France ever does gobble up the Rhineland, it will be with the Rhinelanders' consent, in contrast to the process by which Germany acquired Alsace-Lorraine after the Franco-Prussian war. It might be said, too, that if the French can really persuade those German inhabitants to prefer French government and culture, in the short period of their military tenure pending the fulfillment of Germany's treaty obligations, they will deserve their reward. Germany was unable to accomplish that in Alsace-Lorraine with half a century of complete control, though most of the natives were of Teuton origin.

A southern salesman, writing to his employer, gives these observations of business conditions as he has observed them lately: "It appears to me that the main trouble with our people today is inactivity. Nobody is at work. Every little town I go to is filled with people sitting down and 'cussing' everything and everybody. Everybody has talked hard times until that is all you can hear, and it is the only topic which seems to be familiar to the people. Don't you think it possible to start a propaganda of going to work? Tell the people to do something! If they can't make $5 a day or $3 a day, let them make $2 or $1. If they can't get the kind of a job they would like to have, let them get the next best thing, but for the sake of decency, get some kind of a job." It is a most excellent suggestion. All this loafing and "cussing" accomplish nothing except to make times harder. There is plenty of work to be done, in the big industries and the little ones, on the farms and in homes. Let unemployed men get the best jobs they can, or if no regular salaried jobs are available just now, let them engage in some sort of constructive, creative effort, instead of mere destructive loafing and still more destructive gloom-talk. The more they work, no matter what the work may be, the better off they will be personally, the more good they will do their families and communities, and the more quickly industry in general will revive.

One of the best reasons for arresting an extensive naval program at least temporarily is the changing character of naval warfare and its instruments. Captain Alessandro Guidoni, a war expert in the allied service, has been making tests in launching "submarine" automatic torpedoes from an airplane, and has become so proficient that he hit a target nine times out of ten. The French have just been experimenting with a gun which is to outstrip the famous Big Bertha for length of range, speed and accuracy. The Germans have announced the completion of a bullet-proof, bomb-proof submarine. The United States government took out and sunk in the sea, at the close of the war, tanks of the most deadly poison gas ever invented, which could be dropped in the form of bombs from airplanes. Life on the ocean waves is going to be hard enough for submarines and small surface craft, in case of another war; and what chance will a battleship have, standing up out of the water like a sign-board in a vacant lot? Why spend millions to build them?

Many fine instances of self-denial have been cited in connection with the raising of funds for feeding the starving children of Europe. Not least among them is the voluntary decision of 1400 high school pupils of Evanston, Ill., to go without lunches every other day until a fund of $5000 had been raised for this purpose. These boys and girls are giving ing themselves with their alma in the truest sense of the word. Normal children are hungry when meal-time comes. It is one thing to go without a single article of the usual meal, but quite another not to eat anything at all. Naturally the Evanston young people will not suffer as the little people the suffering for whom their sacrifice is made, but with the first pang of hunger will come a new appreciation of what long-continued hunger must mean. Their offering will go with a greater spirit of tenderness and understanding than will characterize many a larger contribution.

LODGE MEMBERS CROWD TABERNACLE

Procession Over Two Blocks in Length Marches to Revival Services.

TONIGHT DARKEY NIGHT

Collection Will be Taken as the Darkies of the South—Those Donating as High as One Dollar Get Souvenir.

By C. H. Hilton.
 The Odd Fellows and Rebekahs did themselves proud last night with the showing they made at the tabernacle. Their procession must have been two or three blocks in length as they came marching up the street from their hall. They filled the center section of seats, and when they came into the hall sang a number of songs. The evangelist, who is a member of the Odd Fellows' order and understands their principles, gave them a fine preliminary talk.

The services last night were held in opening of account of the ball game at the high school, and the usual preliminaries were omitted. The old appropriate hymn, "Hail to the Tie That Binds," was sung for the occasion, and Mrs. Lewis beautifully rendered, "If a Christian Meet a Christian."

The evangelist used for his thought last night the story of David and Jonathan. He showed how they had exchanged blood, thus promising to stand one by the other; and if called before the other, to help care for any survivors of the family. This developed into the fact that David found Mephibosheth, lame on his feet, and had him brought to his king's table, and restored to him all his father's land. The evangelist said this was the first example of God Fellowship. He gave a description of the fine road over which they travel, the chariot and the attendants, the grounds about the palace and the way they were guarded, and the king's table. It was a very interesting piece of description. His great lessons were that David, helping a disabled young man, was the picture of the disabled human soul saved from sin, that was being helped by the Christ. Also he brought out the thought that here was the home of a noble brotherhood, which applied beautifully to God Fellowship, but more to the Christ. He also showed how this young man was restored to his own while he was doubting before the king, thinking his portion was to be death. A great many people tremble when all thought for them is only good. No evangelist comes to a community to do people harm, but to do them good. His last point was that this disabled boy was saved for the sake of another. It was for his friend Jonathan's sake that the boy was brought to the king's palace. To do things for others' sake is a great motto. Tonight will present some unique features. The evangelist will use for his theme, "If I Were the Devil in Hell, What Would I Do?" Instead of taking the offering in the usual way the old darkey way of the South will be used. The evangelist will give a number of the Southern darkey songs, and a table will be placed in front of the house, and all will march around and put down their offering on the table as the darkeys of the South do. A souvenir will be given to each person who gives as much as one dollar. The invitation of the colored people will be given, for the evangelists have already given a sample of their ability along this line.

On Friday night the girls and business women that are the guests of the churches at the noon day luncheons will be the guests at the tabernacle. The Masons are also invited. The noon day luncheons are proving a great success as a part of the revival, as are also the Sunday afternoon luncheons of young people. The big parade Sunday afternoon will be a unique feature. Sunday is planned as one of the big days of the meeting.

Chorus Girls Puritans Compared to Farmer Types

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 27.—The lady of the chorus is a much maligned person. She is not a naughty girl, or if she is she is clever to submerge her identity under the crime wave. That is the conclusion Secretary of State Lyons has reached. With the aid of his staff and its adding machine, he has learned that 31,662 men and 2772 women were convicted last year.

All the women only one year or two ago. The women were 18 in number. Home brew may have been responsible for the fall of 79 lady cooks, 17 housekeepers, 3 milliners, 1 laundress, 4 seamstresses, 4 teachers, 83 domestics and 89 waitresses.

HUTCHINGS COOKS PIG
 Bakery orders today issued from the Madal Bakery, where under the direction of James Hutchings proprietor, a whole pig was roasted to be used for the social meeting of the B. P. O. PATRONS ASKED TO AID TEACHERS

Urged School Patrons Having Autos Aid Instructors in Reaching Meetings.

ATTENDANCE IS GOOD

In Spite of Bad Weather and Inclement Weather good Attendance is Had at Zone Educational Meetings.

Aid of school patrons and school officers in assisting the teachers in reaching the zone meetings being held throughout the county is asked by the county superintendent in a letter that is being sent out to the various school boards. At the present time the roads are so impassable that many teachers are unable to reach the zone meetings but in spite of that fact the record so far has shown an attendance percentage of 62 percent.

Many teachers are unable to attend because they have no method of transportation without going to an expense, and in order to accommodate these instructors it is asked that patrons or school officers, so far as is possible, extend to the teachers the use of their vehicles for transportation to and from these meetings. The letter being sent out which gives out much valuable information on this subject of the school life, is as follows: "The Educational Zone meetings which we have been holding thru out the county on Saturdays are proving of great value to our teachers. We have now completed the first series and find that 62 percent of the teachers have attended. Our roll call also shows that the other 37 percent who failed to attend was due largely to the inability of the teacher to do so on account of the bad condition of the roads, or a lack of a way to reach the meeting place. "We believe that it is to the interest of every school district that the teacher attend all of these meetings, and we hope that through the interest and co-operation of the school boards and patrons, practically all of the teachers may get the benefit of these teacher councils. "The meetings are scheduled for Saturdays and in the nearest town so that no time need be lost from the school. We are asking the board members and patrons in the rural communities to kindly assist the teacher in some way to attend. It may often happen that some one of the neighborhood will have business in town that day, and could offer the teacher a ride. Or, it may be that the business calling them to town may be of such a nature that it could be put off until the day of the meeting and thus accommodate the teacher. We believe that where no such opportunity presents itself that there be those in the community sufficiently interested in the welfare of the school to donate a little time and furnish the teacher with transportation. All of the board members and patrons are urged to assist in any way that they can in these matters. "We are coming more and more to realize that the most vital interest in any community is the school, and matters pertaining to the interests of education should be the concern of all. We note with satisfaction the awakened interest in favor of better schools and want to thank our school boards and patrons for their splendid co-operation. We believe that you will do all you can to comply with the request contained in this letter. "The subjects discussed at the councils are of vital importance, and are of such a nature that the interest of the teacher, board member and the patron is necessary. If anything worth while is accomplished, they contain such topics as Standard Schools and Equipment, Better English Plans for the better physical development for the child, The state course of study, Better methods in all school branches, Professional Reading of the teacher, Industrial Club activities and round table discussions of local problems. "All board members, school patrons and friends are earnestly invited to attend when convenient and to take a part in all discussions as it is believed that they will be interested and benefited. "Dates and places for all remaining meetings for this school year are as follows: Aldine and Myrtle Creek combined at Myrtle Creek on Feb. 12 and at Hiddle on March 12. Oakland and Sutherlin combined at Oakland Feb. 26 and at Sutherlin on March 19. Youcalla and Drain combined at
