

St. Louis. Monday.

HEL-LO-o-o-o PETE:

In two more shakes of a lamb's tail I'd have been between the sheets—but I got taken with another large idea for Camel Cigarette ads that's so bright you can phone 'em to cut the current because you just had your lamps lit!

Tell you, it's a whale of a stunt! Everybody right quiet—and hats off! NOW—far as I know or ever heard, there never has been one of those zippy slogans under that big display name "Camel". I'VE GOT ONE—get me? Put both your ears close to the ground and get the rumble of a broadside like this:

Camel
Once it meant an animal—
now a Cigarette!

Wow, Pete! I'll testify that's a stoneless peach! Spread it like I've dented it in here—and you've uncorked an eye-ful! Suppose you'll want to call me old Mr. Hammer because I hit the nail on the head!

And, bet real money that if this slogan stuff keeps me awake the rest of the night, I'll wire and offer it to R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. before you hit the deck! And, I'll be spending some of the proceeds for noon eats! In the "lang-wage" of Jigger Jones of Joplin, "you tell 'em old yacht, you've got the sales spirit!"

Blowing out of St. Louis at 10.12 tomorrow with a bundle of business. Off for Ohio. Got something on me mind!

Till I get it off—

Shorty.

Ex-TRY! Ex-TRY!
Just got a wire, I sold 'em that slogan! Pete, eat on me! S. J.

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

A Letter From Ken.

"I think I will read my letters without getting up," I said. The nurse propped me up with pillows and began to open the envelopes for me with the paper knife. When she had finished those in the basket she reached for Ken's letter which I still held in my hand. "I will open this one for you," I said, "and, if you don't mind, Dad, I would like to read it alone."

"Are you sure you're well enough?" my father asked anxiously. "Of course I am, I am feeling much better than I did this morning."

"And I was, for the letter was what I had been waiting, listening for all day. Without another word my father and the nurse left the room. For a long time I just sat and held that letter in my hands, and then almost convulsively, pressed it to my lips. Whatever it contained, whatever of hope or despair, I then knew that it would be the real cry of Ken's heart to mine.

Slowly and lovingly I spread the pages before me. They were closely written over. Again I raised them to my lips, and yet, I was afraid to read.

The letter began without a salutation. It seemed as if Ken had determined only to talk to me.

"For the first time, dear heart in many weeks, I can see a glimmer of light ahead, for you, beloved are in my world again.

"While you have been so very ill, I have felt that should you go away from me forever, I would be like the old man in Holy Writ, who was just ready to curse God and die.

"Ann, I have paid. Only God and myself, perhaps, know that I have paid to the uttermost farthing for whatever the world may say. I know my mistake—for my sin, for dear, that my mistakes have been made in regard to Grace, but my sins have been against you and our love.

"Down deep in my heart I have always known one thing absolutely, dear heart, I have known it from the time that we were children, although perhaps, I never even confessed it to myself until that awful morning that I awoke to find myself the husband of Grace Cameron.

"That morning, Ann, I know that the real sin I had committed was not against Grace, but against you. I had also made my life a sordid wreck. And I knew that I should soon be plunging the depths of horror under me as long as I live.

"I shall never be able to tell you even the despair that encompassed me on that morning. But at last I pulled myself together with the determination to go through with it.

At that time Ann, although I knew that you were fond of me as a childhood pal, but I was not sure that you loved me. Had I realized, I do not think I could have gone through with it all. It is only since Grace left me and I have gone back over what you have been doing for me and mine all these years, that I have understood how splendid, how self-sacrificing how devoted your love for me has been.

"Forgive me sweetheart for saying this. I do not think any man, except me could tell a woman she loved him and he knew it before she had told him herself, but no man, dear has known a woman as I have known you. And you are too big to have any little qualms of vanity, which must be consulted at a time like this.

"Ann, it may seem strange to you, but from the time I married Grace, I have never bowed to one of her foolish whims, I have never indulged in her foolish love of pleasure from luxurious waste, never kept from voicing a censorious word when she maddened me almost beyond bearing that I did not do it for you.

"I tried honestly to be a good husband to Grace, and I think, that perhaps because I tried to do it for your sake, I was unable to keep the spirit as well as the letter. Carefully as I tried to conceal my love for you even from myself, Grace seemed to know from the first and she accused me many times of it. At first I tried to deny it but my denials were lacking in force and finally I kept silent. This only added fuel to her anger, but I was a coward, and I have been doubly a coward since, when she threatened me that if I divorced her, and you know that according to the law, she would drag your reputation in the dust.

"And, yet, even now, I must take my share of the blame, Grace wrote me in her last letter that had I loved her as passionately as young Simington, she would have stayed with me still. She thanked me ironically for everything I had given her. "You have given me all" she said, "except the one thing you had given to Ann." It was probably because this was all true that she took pleasure in hurting me, in making me feel always that I was resting over a volcano, that might erupt at any moment.

"At last it did erupt. Truly, Ann, I have no doubt toward that boy with whom Grace went away. I now know very well what she can do with any man when she sets her mind to it. Her beauty at times is irresistible.

"Dear heart, I do not expect an answer to this letter until you have decided what I shall do. At the present it is enough that I can pour out my heart to you—can tell you that I worship and have always worshipped you. Oh, if you only knew what it means to be able to say this. Some day, perhaps, I shall want more, but just now this seems to me to be a reward for which I am unworthy. I love you, dear, I love you. Ken."

Demand Curtains For Wax Models

(By United Press). LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21.—It looks like curtains for the bold, bad women in wax.

Authorities are wondering over a request by a delegation of local women moralists that demand that wax figures of women in downtown stores be dressed and undressed behind a drawn curtain.

Crowds of men sometimes numbering 200, say the women, gather and watch while the garments are removed from the mannikins—or the womankins—before they are tucked away for the night.

Frequently, it is charged, the models are entirely denuded of gowns, corsets, teddy—well everything. Traffic is often blocked, the delegation added.

BIG BEND SYNDICATE, Box 293, Alpine, Texas. JOIN THE C. OF C.—GIRLS.—HERE IS A HINT FROM ONE WHO KNOWS

(By United Press). LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21.—Youths in their twenties do not make good husbands, says J. F. Townsend, deputy sheriff, to whose attention comes all domestic mix-ups which reach the Los Angeles courts.

"After a few months of marital life young men usually succumb to the lure of questionable pool and dance halls," Townsend asserted. "They find their salaries do not provide pleasure for two, and drift out from home and eventually wind up in the failure to provide courts and on to the divorce courts."

"And to make the analysis worse, so far as the Caucasian races are concerned, it appears that Americans in proportion to the population, are leading Mexicans and negroes in the number of arrests for wife and child abandonment.

Subway Is No Place For Skunk

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The subway is NO PLACE for a skunk. That not unkind animal, is all quite well adapted to the collar of a seal coat, or the banding on a velvet frock. But, an untraced and at large, he is definitely out of place. Especially in the subway. It is too crowded there and there are so many jolting cars that annoy him. This one got in, however, probably commuted from Jersey, because it was between the Pennsylvania station and Times Square that he first made himself evident. From then on, there was no mistaking the fact of his being in our midst, and no one seemed to be able to think of a way to remove him. He just made his way up and down and between the trains, while motormen resigned and passengers wondered if it were one more effort to get an increased fare.
