President's Letters Form Basis of Book

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—(United Press.)—When Charles Swen, President Wilson's stenographer, finally publishes his book on an eight years' association with the man most prominent in the world's eye during that time, an intimate, personal history of the world war, its causes and its effect will be added to the world's literature.

That such a book will eventually be published has been admitted by the quietly efficient master of the curio of shorthand, but he very definitely stated that no such book would appear upon the market for several years and until all possible objections of President Wilson has been obviated.

Publications have not been slow to realize the importance of Swen's personal acquaintance with the president and have made flattering offers. Even the compilation of the letters, which the president wrote during the eventful days of 1917 and 1918 in book form, with a bit of explanation by Swen about the circumstances which called for the letters would be a most valuable commentary on actions taken by the administration which are now little understood by the public.

In the mass of material, which Swen is now packing up for his departure about March 1 for Chicago, where he will take up his old position with the Gregg Publishing company, which he held before he became the president's stenographer is a stack of notebooks about three feet high containing practically all the correspondence of President Wilson dictated for the past eight years. These will form the basis for Swen's book when he finally decides to give his reminiscences to the world.

SCENE OF MAJESTIC BEAUTY

Table Mountain, for Many Reasons, Is Superior to Any of the Earth's Great Peaks.

I have seen many flat-topped kopjes in Africa. I have seen the bare and golden Atlas range drop away into the golden sands of Mogador, but I have never seen anything resembling its mighty mass which is the dominant, the royal fact of the Cape Peninsula. . . . It is by virtue of its mass and the colossal buttressed cliffs which form its walls that Table Mountain is majestic, as also by the abruptness of its rise from the visible sea-level. The height of inland mountains is a matter of faith rather than sight; but this mountain, like Etna and the Peak of Teneriffe and others whose roots are in the sea, announces its stature at once to the eye. It rises more immediately from the sea than either of these, yet not so immediately as it appears to do when seen from the bay. It throws out toward the ocean low spurs of mingled rock and green banks. In spring these grassy banks are all set with flowers. Among them is a pretty white flower, about the size of a narcissus, though different in shape, of which I have seen a bouquet in England, many weeks after it had been gathered at the Cape, standing in a vase without water and still quite fresh. . . . —Margaret L. Woods.

NEED FOR BALANCE WHEEL

Courage is, of Course, a Magnificent Thing, But Should Be Regulated by Prudence.

Courage is an indispensable quality in our success; but if it is not balanced and regulated by prudence it will run away with us and lead us into all sorts of foolhardy things. Boldness is a great quality when it is held in check by proper caution and guided by good judgment.

I know a man whose courage is very much over-developed and his faculty of caution is very deficient. He does not know what fear means, and he plunges into all sorts of foolish operations which do not turn out well, and he is always trying to get out of things which he had gone into hastily. If his prudence had been equally developed with his courage, with his boldness, he would have made a very strong man.

Futile endeavors, half-hearted efforts never accomplish anything. It takes the fire of determination, energy, push, and good judgment to accomplish that which counts. It is the well-balanced enthusiastic man with fire in his blood, and ginger in his brain, who makes things move and achieves the seemingly impossible. —Denver Catholic Register.

The Kiss in Ancient Folklore.

A story of Alexander the Great and a kiss forms one of the most thrilling bits of history. An enemy of the king's invented a novel plot to cause Alexander's death. He discovered a beautiful young girl, who like Rappaccini's daughter in Hawthorne's story, had been brought up on deadly poison, and every one who came near her was killed by her deadly atmosphere. She was sent to the king's palace with instructions to do what would be called "vamping" today. Alexander saw and admired her extravagantly, but the shrewd Aristotle suspected treachery. Before he allowed the girl to approach the throne he sent for a criminal who had been sentenced to death, and instructed him to kiss the girl in the presence of the king. He fell dead on the ground, like one struck by lightning.

The same story appears in folklore of India, and the early Christian monks made great use of it in their sermons, personifying the Christian as Alexander, conscience as Aristotle, sin as the venomous girl, and the weak sinner as the criminal who was punished.

Disagree Over Famous Vine.

On Roanoke Island, off the North Carolina coast, stands an ancient Scuppernon vine. It is near the grave of Virginia Dare and the site of the "Lost Colony." Nobody knows the age of that vine, but many nearby vines, which seem more youthful by comparison, actually are known to be more than one hundred years old. A regional contribution to American mythology credits Sir Walter Raleigh with having planted the vine where it now stands, and further claims are that it is the original Scuppernon. Unimaginative investigators, however, say that the original Scuppernon grew wild in Tyrrell county, North Carolina, along the Scuppernon river, well before 1700, and that from this county the species found its way to Roanoke Island.

Shoe-Throwing Old Custom.

Throwing old shoes was not always confined to weddings, though the custom nowadays has come to be associated entirely with the going away of bridal couples. Authorities differ as to the origin of the practice and its exact significance; it seems, however, as if it had to do with the transfer of property—women being regarded as such among the nations in which the custom began.

It was in the sense of confirming a sale or exchange that the Jews understood the removal and giving of a shoe or sandal. When the kinsman of Boaz consented to waive his claim upon the parcel of land which Naomi would sell, he "drew off his shoe," for "this is the custom of Israel."

HER DAUGHTER AND HIS SON.

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

Outward Bound.
For one long moment I looked into Harry Simington's face. And I saw there what should have been given me to see—the despairing expression of a youth whose yesterday had passed leaving nothing but a vain petition that Memory would forsake him.

Without a word I went into my room and slipped on a coat and hat and followed him down to the entrance.

As he was about to call a taxi I said, "Why not walk?" It is only a short distance to the Maurice.

"You'll understand," he said, as he beckoned to a chauffeur.

Wonderingly I entered the taxi, and my thoughts reverted to Grace. It seemed but yesterday when I had seen the brilliant, icy glow in Grace's eyes—eyes that seemed hard as steel and as unbreakable.

Not a word was said until we reached Grace's suite. Mr. Simington tapped on the door and it was opened immediately by a nurse who must have been waiting.

"Come quickly," she said. "Madame is asking for you."

I held back thinking it was the man with me for whom Grace was waiting, but the nurse said: "Madame, it is for you she waits," and she opened the door.

Bolstered up against the silk and lace of her pillows and partly covered by the emerald coat thrown carelessly across her bed, lay the wasted form of the girl I had known since childhood. Never had she looked so beautiful or so soulless.

She raised her brilliant, blue eyes to mine, and said quietly: "Well, Ann, you have won." I crossed the room quickly, knelt by her bed and started to speak.

With a great effort she raised her hand, almost transparent in its slenderness. "Don't," she said, in the same old imperious manner I knew so well. "I haven't time to listen. And what you can say to me must soon be forgotten in my long sleep. What I shall say to you, Ann, is important. It is necessary that you shall remember."

A faint smile curled her lips and I began to tremble. Harry Simington moved to the other side of the narrow bed and took one of her hands. A look of such longing and anguish saddened his face that my heart went out in sympathy to him.

For a moment Grace closed her eyes and I thought that her life would ebb without her talking to me. But again her indomitable will asserted itself. She opened her eyes quickly. Her face lighted up with a flush, and one looking at her casually would not have realized that she was dying. Clear and musical her voice rose again. In it there was something of the indefinable charm of childhood as thought in this last hour, when the cycle was nearing completion and her life was outward bound on an infinite, unknown sea.

beneficent nature brought back something of nobler, happier days. And I thought of the days when Grace and I and Kenneth had knelt together, as I knelt now, in the little church of our tiny village and listened to the benediction of the preacher. And in memory, his words of Scripture, rolling full-toned and sonorous over the congregation, came back to me:

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them;

"Or ever the silver chords be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the heel broken at the cistern.

"Then shall the dust return to the earth it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

"Here Comes The Bride!"

Everybody wishes her well! Happy and radiant she starts out on life's adventure. She should have health to begin with. Good looks in woman do not depend upon age, but upon health.

On never see a good-looking woman who is weak, run-down, irritable, out of sorts, fidgety and nervous. Headaches, backaches, dragging-down pains, irregularities and troubles of that sort are all destroyers of beauty. Men do not admire sickness.

It is within the reach of every woman to be well, healthy and strong if she will take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—"I suffered something terrible from an organic trouble. Could scarcely stand on my feet. My head and back ached so hard and I was weak and nervous. I had a severe pain in my side and my limbs and feet ached. I was also troubled with constipation. I took Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, Golden Medical Discovery and the Pleasant Pellets, and these medicines relieved me of all my ailments and I was well and strong."—MISS W. D. vanity of vanities saith the preacher."

With a start I came back to the scene before me and heard Grace say:

"Yes, Ann, you have won. And I have to thank myself, not you, for my defeat. Had I cared enough for Kenneth Halsey to keep him, you, nor any other woman, could not have taken him from me. And I want you to know now"—again her eyelids closed over her eyes for a moment, and again she pulled herself together with visible effort—"I want you to know that I am giving up the fight because it isn't worth the trouble. Nothing satisfies—and I am gladly looking forward to the last great sensation of all."

There was a stifled groan from the other side of the room. For a moment Grace turned her eyes upon the bowed head of the man kneeling there, and for the first time in the years that I had known her, a little spark of pity, of commiseration, of thought for someone else, upon her face.

Slowly she put her hand out and it rested upon his hair. There was a convulsive tremor but in no other way did Harry Simington acknowledge the slight caress.

Hardly a breath stirred her waxen bosom and she was silent so long that I partly arose.

There was a quiver in the hand that lay on the coverlet. "Don't leave me, Ann. Give me this last triumph. Give me the chance to leave you. Let me make you understand that with my birth and environment I could do no different than I have done. I have always chased that greatest will-of-the-wisp that beckons mortals on and now that I have exhausted every sensation—"

"Except love," came from his pale lips as Harry Simington raised his face.

A softer light came into Grace's steely blue eyes. I could have almost imagined that it was the mist that eternity was flinging over them except that the hand that had been upon his hair dropped down in a caress to his lips.

Unconscious of me, this man, who had been perhaps the one man who loved Grace Cameron unselfishly, caught her hand and covered it with frenzied kisses. "I can't let you go, Grace," I can't let you go!"

"Another lover is calling me," she said with curious intensity, "but before I go I want you to understand, Ann, that in the years to come when you and Ken are together, there will be moments of twilight, when dusk shuts down upon the world and before the lamps are lighted, when the ghost of my kisses will haunt your husband's lips, and kindle his memory aflame."

For a moment I thought that the choking sound which I heard came from my own lips, so terrible were my emotions, and then I knew by the sound of convulsive weeping that came from the other side of the bed that Grace Cameron had died as she had lived—my implacable enemy.

Tomorrow—Together.

Girl of Twenty Dupes Oregon Vet

BALTIMORE, Feb. 28.—Webster Perkins, 32, who fought a just cause with the armies of the Confederacy, decided today that he had sold his horse and chickens and come east from his farm near Portland, Ore., for another lost cause.

He waited for three days at the Union station here for "Dorothy Lisbon of Syracuse" to appear for the wedding which they had arranged through a matrimonial agency, but the rescuer in his coat lapel and the identification in his hand (the means of identification agreed upon) withered along with his hopes. Tonight he threw the withered flowers away and started south.

"Dorothy Lisbon was 26 and had rosy cheeks, the ad in the paper said," the old man told a representative of the Travelers' Aid association tonight.

"I answered the ad. I was lonely out there on the farm, and she was to inherit a fortune."

He wrote Dorothy that he was old and had nothing but his love to offer, but that he was still able to work and provide for her. He had fought for the Confederacy.

Perkins sold his horse and chickens. This was necessary to buy the expensive diamond ring and raise the $200 which he sent for railroad fare and a trousseau for Dorothy.

They were to be married in Washington, March 4. Dorothy was to meet him in Baltimore three days ago.

But Perkins was "waiting at the church." Dorothy and the diamond ring and the $200 are still missing.
