Alicia Hammersly

A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idah McGlone Gibbons
The Noted Writer

Friends of Hal's Call

"Yes, Mrs. Hammersly," continued Ruth Welty, "I think she cared more for Hal than she has ever cared for any other man. Of course, that was some years ago and is ancient history now."

"I was glad when I found that some other girl had taken Hal away from her, for she was only getting a dose of her own medicine."

"Don't take Ruth too seriously," said Mr. Lord, who was evidently a little disturbed by the frank talking of Ruth Welty. "Ruth doesn't like Nell, who is really, in my estimation quite a superior girl."

"Of course she's a superior girl in your estimation, as well as the estimation of every other man," said Ruth, "but I do not like her and I never did."

"That's strange," I said. "I liked her very much from the moment I talked to her this afternoon. We just talked only a very little while. I had walked down the hill to meet my husband and just at the foot of it, I came upon him and Miss Marshall. They chanced to meet there."

"Again that queer look passed between Mr. and Mrs. Lord and altho I was not sure I had recognized this the first time, now, I could not be mistaken."

Just then Hal arrived from bringing his mother home. He had hardly seated himself when Ruth spoke up. "I hear Nell Marshall is on her old stamping ground. Your wife tells me she met you there with her tonight at the foot of the hill. Must have seemed like old times for her to meet you there, Hal. Everyone in town used to find both of you there about five o'clock every afternoon when you were in the city. How did she like being interrupted by your wife?"

"Nell seemed to be pleased," said Hal composedly. "She told Alice that she was going to love her in the future instead of me."

"So, she intimated, Mrs. Hammersly, that she had been in love with Hal?" said Ruth. "She certainly has nerve."

"Oh, I didn't understand it that way at all," I defended Nell. "From what I saw, I thought Hal had been desperately in love with Miss Marshall and I rather commended him for his good taste."

"I wasn't going to let that little cat, Ruth, think that she was both-er-ing me, but Hal spoiled it all by saying."

"Alicia, are you crazy? Of course I wasn't desperately in love with Miss Marshall." And he said it so earnestly that for the first time I thought that there might have been more to the episode than he would have me think, and I was afraid that the others would come to the same conclusion."

"I did not know that Ruth was such a cat," said Hal as he shut the door on our visitors and turned to me in the hall. "How did you like the Lords, Alice?"

"Very much; I particularly liked Mrs. Lord. Although she said very little, she impressed me as being a very charming woman."

"She is."

"You say that my dear as though she were too good for her husband."

"Alice, every woman is too good for her husband if she is good for anything at all."

"Why are you so remorseful this evening? Did your meeting with Miss Marshall put you in this frame of thought?"

"It isn't possible that you're jealous, Alice? Why, I wouldn't have married Nell Marshall if she were the last person on earth."

"But you told me you were in love with her."

"I was in a way, yes. I told you she was my first love, but I never contemplated marrying her."

"Do you think she knew this?"

"I am not sure. But every woman must know that a man does not have marriage on his mind every time he tells a woman he loves her."

"I had been answered, I knew when he said this that Hal did not even think of marriage when he told me he loved me."

Tuesday—Did Hal Really Propose?

AROUND THE TOWN

Goes to Medford—

Joe Shockey left last night for Medford to attend to business matters.

Here Yesterday—

James Clark, of the Umpqua poultry farm at Winchester, was attending to business matters in the city yesterday.

Leave for Idaho—

Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Carnes left yesterday for an extended trip through Idaho. They will visit with their children during their absence in that state.

Blake-McFall Man Here—

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Miller, of Portland, are spending several days here attending to business matters. Mr. Miller is a representative of the Blake-McFall company of that city.

Return to Portland—

Mrs. Nellie Parmelee and Mrs. F. P. Clark left this afternoon for their home in Portland after spending the past week visiting in this city. They were at the home of Mrs. W. E. Ingersoll during their stay in this city.

Was Acquainted With Coney—

Lieutenant William D. Coney, the unfortunate aviator who lost his life recently in an attempt to lower his own transcontinental flight record, was a friend of Lei Devaney of this city. They were both in the same flying class at Kelley field for a number of months. Mr. Devaney speaks very highly of the flyer whose death occurred last week, following the accident in which his back was broken.

Laughable Incidents—

Filled with laughable incidents and rollicking situations portraying the efforts of a newly-rich family to keep pace with the ways and vagaries of modern society forms the plot of one of the most entertaining offerings of the season. The title of the new piece is "Bringing Up Father at the Sea Shore," and which will be the latest Gus Hill triumph to be seen at the Antlers theatre tomorrow night, April 6. This particular play which is brand new in every respect is based on the popular cartoons of the same name by George McManus, in three acts and has the advantage of exclusive music, a large and competent cast and plenty of novelties heretofore unknown in the annals of similar attractions. If you have enjoyed the Jiggs and Mahoney in the confines of the pages of your favorite newspaper you certainly will more than be amused by this clever concoction.
