Alicia Hammersly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Ida McGlone Gibson
The Red Writer

Alicia Hammersly, nee Alicia Atwell, and commonly called Alix—is telling the absorbing story of her girlhood. She is engaged to Hal Hammersly. On the morning of her wedding day, she wonders whether she really knows the man she is to marry. Alicia's thoughts lead her to seek her mother for consolation. She finds her mother in the attic seated before an old trunk which is "filled with memories." As Alicia enters, her mother is fondling a pair of baby shoes. Alicia's mother consoles her and points out that the great happiness to be found in a marriage based on understanding, but warns Alicia that it is something very different from the day dreams of an engaged girl. After the ceremony Hal confides to Alicia that his income will necessitate strict economy and they must live with his parent for a while. Alicia is downcast as Hal's parents had old fashioned ideas as to what she should do. Alicia meets Nell Marshall, an old sweet heart of Hal's. The same evening, old friends of Hal's, Mr. and Mrs. Lord and a Ruth Welby call. From the conversation she learns that Nell Marshall has long been the belle of the city. Alicia awakens in the night wondering if Hal had really proposed when he told her he loved her, or did she innocently misunderstand him and let the matter drift into matrimony. His reply satisfies her. Nell Marshall calls. Speaking to Alicia of Hal, Nell confesses that she has been fond of Hal. Nell is going on a visit to Alicia's home city.

Nell Marshall's Plan

It seemed a very unkind part that Fate was doling out to me when she allowed Nell Marshall to go on a visit to my home and see and talk with my mother. Nell could not care for any of them, for she had never seen them, while I wanted them so much felt that the aching of my own heart would never be cured until I could lay my head on my mother's breast—must stay here. And at the thought, my tears—homesick tears—came in anew.

"Don't cry," said Nell. "I don't like tears. They don't do you any good and they only make your eyes look dimmer. Show me the woman of forty whose eyes are not bright and clear and I will show you a woman who has wept much. A woman who has not had the stamina to take life's blows without wincing. Why do you not go home yourself, Alix? To live in this house would take the very life out of me and I am not nearly so emotional or sensitive as you are. You have grown pale and thin since I first saw you. If you stay here—in this house—in this atmosphere much longer, something unpleasant is going to happen for you must understand as well as I, that Hal is a worshipper of beauty. The moment I saw you, my dear, I knew why he had fallen in love with you. And it isn't worth giving up that beauty of yours, for the sake of two old people neither of whom appreciate it. Remember, you've got your life to live with Hal. Hal's mother and father have lived the better part of theirs."

"Oh, I wish I could live somewhere else, but—"

"Of course you can. And I really think you should for Hal's sake as well as your own. Why, do you know that he wouldn't stand it here for a minute if it weren't for you. If you should leave him, go home for a little while, he'll find that out. I am going to be over in your city for about a week. Come over while I am there. I am going to have your mother send for you. And, before you leave, tell Hal that when you come back, you will expect him to have some other place for you to live."

After I had bade Nell Marshall good night, I went up stairs very softly, and set about getting ready for bed, for Hal seemed to be sleeping. I did not want to waken him, because the thought of going home to my mother had made such an impression on me that I wanted to present it to him when he was in his very best humor, so that he would let me go.

My father had sent me the check that he had given me for a wedding present, and, though it was supposed to go for furniture for my new home I had already used some of it, and I would use more of it, if necessary, to make the trip home. Hal had said nothing to me about money although we had been married six months, and I had not yet the courage to ask him. Three or four times I had found a five dollar bill pinned to my cushion, but neither of us had said anything about it.

The modern girl of today can hardly understand the problems of the woman of yesterday. I was sure that Hal was generous, but he still seemed to think that as long as I was with him, he paid the bills, and when I went out without him, I did not need any money. I knew also that had been the method of his father in regard to his wife, and consequently it seemed all right to Hal.

I was determined, however, to say something to Hal about this when we got a home of our own. I planned to suggest that a part of his income be set aside for me. This I knew must be done, or I would never be happy. Just as I had come to this conclusion, my ears were assailed by a sound that caused my flesh to creep—to me it was more ominous than the sound of a snake.

I heard a cat purring.

"Hal, Hal, wake up," I called shaking him—for all fear of making him angry had vanished.

"What is the matter?" he asked in such a manner that I knew he had been feigning sleep.

"That cat is in the room."

"Don't be foolish, Tommy has been gone a long while."

"Of course I believed him, even against my sense of hearing, and turning out the gas, got into bed. As my feet stretched down they touched something soft and furry. I gave a loud scream and knew no more.

Tomorrow—Alicia determines to go home.

A Message to the People of Oregon

By Governor Olcott

IT IS with pleasure I take the opportunity thus afforded me to urge upon the people of the state the importance of rallying around Oregon industries by the purchase of Oregon products.

The prosperity of all of us is very closely linked with the prosperity of such industries. When Oregon people invest in Oregon industries by the simple method of buying their products, they are making an investment which cannot help but bring large returns to themselves.

I sincerely trust that this campaign to educate the people of the state into the knowledge that the purchase of Oregon products means a greater and better Oregon for each and every one of us will meet with success from the start.

LOOK YOUR FORD OVER

Every owner of a Ford car should give his machine the "once over" at least once each year. The car should be gone over and attention given to small details in order to avoid future trouble and a greater expense. It is good business judgment to do this. You owe it to your car.

LET US TUNE HER UP!
