SPORTS CHATTER

Miss Doreen Kavanaugh, of Colorado, who won the California state women's championship, played some of the most brilliant, and yet some of the most commonplace brand of golf. Could she maintain the best of her game without the injections or spells of off play, she would be a factor to be reckoned with in any company. The play which won her the championship title, was of championship calibre.

The crown, the possession of which denotes the wearer as the supreme queen of swimmers, which for many years was worn by Fanny Durack, of Australia, not only seems to fit the brow of Miss Billebre of America, who is now wearing it, but it seems that she is inserting into it a number of rare gems by prowess. Followers of the swimming sport assert that the young American girl will reign supreme as the best of all time up to date and honor, which, to date, has been accorded the Australian girl.

While there is frequent hue and cry that athletics are prone to lower the standard of scholarship of the athlete, we do not hear so much of the fact that the undergraduate members of athletic teams are also subject to the same ailment. As a matter of fact, the business end of managing a big team requires more time and attention than the athletic end. It has recently come to light that Harvard's university undergraduate managers are not standing as high in their classes as they might. As a matter of fact, this is probably more than offset by the business knowledge obtained through practical experience. Tens of thousands of dollars are handled by these youthful business men every year.

The Navy crew of the Annapolis Academy, which last year won the championship in eight oared rowing by cleaning up all the colleges in this country and then winning the Olympic games, still has six of its 1920 crew as well as the coxswain.

Few colleges in the United States have graduated players into the professional ranks to a greater extent than Georgetown university. This is specialized in the national sports. Reports from this institution are to the effect that the 1921 combination is made of a bunch of players who are more than likely to be snapped up by the major league scouts.

In the first twelve games played this year, "Babe" Ruth has failed to get a hit in only three of them. His opening day was most productive, when he lined out five safe smacks for five times at bat. His sacrifice hit column in the 12 games shows a zero, while there is only one stolen base to his credit.

Jim Corbett, one time the world's heavyweight ring champion believes there is nothing better to develop speed in a boxer than the game of handball. He had advised Jack Dempsey to add this game to his regular training program. Speed of the eye and foot are needed in this game and this is just what many believe will go a long way toward nullifying the efforts of Carpenter, whose speed is one of his principal assets.
