Alicia Hammerly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idah McClone Gibson

Tragic News.

I found the weeks I waited for my baby somewhat wearisome, although I busied myself making the little wardrobe and putting into each garment stitches which meant hopes and prayers. Hal wrote often for him, and his letters were extremely encouraging. His business was fine. He was working hard and thinking of me. I began to stay more and more in my own room. I wanted to be all alone with my thoughts.

I have often thought that women would be dread children so greatly if the long months before did not rob them of some of their beauty. Would it not be splendid if a woman grew more beautiful each day instead of uglier as the day of her exaltation drew nearer. I came to hope that Hal would not come to see me, because when he left I was looking my best; and it was salmest with relief that I read a letter from him one morning in which he said that he was going to Charleston and it would be impossible for him to come to me for three or four weeks. I knew that by this time everything would be over and perhaps I would be able to go home with him. The letter was one of the dear ones he had been in the habit of writing me—that I was beginning to expect almost daily. I slipped into the bosom of my dress and the crackling, crisp paper against my heart reminded me of him all day.

I went to bed early, and although as I undressed, I was afraid that I should be wakeful, it must have been only a few moments before I was fast asleep. Once or twice during the night I awakened, thinking that I had heard some noise about the house. Once I was sure that I heard my mother's voice, and then some one said "Hush!" However, I was really too sleepy to pay very much attention.

The next morning when I opened my eyes it was to look into the face of my mother. She was very very pale, and the expression on her face was almost pitiful.

"What is the matter, mother?" I inquired.

"Oh, Alix, how can I tell you." "Something must have happened to Hal."

"You must be brave dear, you must be brave."

"What is it? Tell me, tell me—quickly. I can bear it."

For answer she took me up in her arms and tears which she could not restrain fell on my face.

"Oh, Mother, why do you keep me in suspense. Tell me what has happened to Hal. Is he hurt?"

"Alix, Hal is dead."

"For a moment I didn't realize what she had said. 'Where was he hurt? Are they bringing him here?'"

"Why, child, don't you understand? There has been a terrible railroad wreck. Hal was among those who were killed."

"Killed—dead—dead—killed" I found myself repeating these words trying to make myself realize what they meant, but I could not. They seemed to be words in a language that I did not understand.

"Don't look that way, dear," said my mother as she gently covered my eyes.

I longed to the I. O. O. F., Rebekahs and the W. O. W.

The funeral ceremony was in charge of the I. O. O. F., of which he had been a member for about 55 years.

His body lies in the beautiful I. O. O. F. cemetery at Grants Pass, but his spirit is over on the other shore, awaiting the glorious morn when all will be united in a world where parting is no more.

GOIN' FISHIN'

I tell you what I like ter do 'Long 'bout now, when winter's thru An' summer comes a'flutterin' 'Round with birds an' everything. Its just to dig some bait, and get 'My fishin' pole, an' go an' set 'An' fish.

I loves ter hear the happy song 'Th' creek keeps singin' all day long The song that somehow seems ter say "Oh, aint it fine an' grand terday: "Aunt aint God good." While all th' time.

Y' watch the bobber on your line. An' fish.

Its kinda joyous, jes' to stretch Out lazy on th' grass, an' ketch A whiff o' violets now an' then when all he trick o' tongue or pen 'At ever could express 'em all: 'The things I feel, when I kin sprawl 'An' fish.

Oh, lots o' things, 'at fellers do, Is fine—but say, twixt me an' you, Th' whole caboodle, hunched in one Aint got one half the sure-pop fun 'At I can get, from beatin' it 'Away from all o' this,—and sit 'An' fish.
