Larry's Devotion.
"The shops will be closed by this time," said Bart in answer to Larry's request to find a shop where he could rent a typewriter.
"You'll have to get up early then, Larry. You and Alex are to play tennis at 10 o'clock," said Bab.
"All games and bets are off. We will be playing the typewriter at that time," grinned Larry.
"Alex has engaged me as her secretary. We are going to work four hours daily this summer," and Larry's eyes twinkled.
"That is news," emphasized Bab her eyes two interrogation points. "And may I ask just what you are going to do, Larry, and how much you expect to be paid for it?"
"Larry can play a typewriter better than he can a piano, Bab—which is going some," commented Bart.
"Contributing to the success of a genius will be reward enough," answered Larry.
"If I thought this literary partnership was going to last I'd feel obliged for the good of the football team, to get you away from here. I didn't bring you home with me, Larry, to keep you cooped up pounding a typewriter this summer. We've got to get in condition for football this fall."
"I'll be there harder than nails," smiled Larry, amused at Bart's vehemence. "Tennis, hikes, rowing—I am going to help Alex mix exercise with mental effort."
"Mental effort, bosh!" said Bart, with the assurance of youth which associates effort only with masculine exertion. "If you ask me what I think of the story that magazine bought, I'll tell you it was drivel. I don't take much to this analyzing every emotion, and every impulse a person has. But if Alex can find anyone to give her three-figure checks for her stories I am reconciled," and Bart had the good grace to grin.
"Nice sort of a companion Bart's going to be, for the woman he marries," said Bab.
"Why not?" demanded Bart. "I am going to give the woman I marry a nice home, plenty of money, and gratify most of her wishes. We are going to live and love without asking the why's and the whereof's."
"My hero in 'Her Marriage' was that type of man, if you will remember, Bart. But why talk about the things that so in books just now, with all this beautiful country before us. Anyone with a modicum of brain and a little patience can write a story but it takes the han of Nature and the creative power of God to form the rose bush climbing over that cottage yonder. I love roses. If I had the money I would have them about me all the time."
"You should live in California then," said Larry. "There you see literally miles of rose hedges. And the bungalows in April are veritable bowers of crimson and blush and faint creamy yellow and white."
"Sometimes," I answered him, "I have thought that I would like to live there if it is that land of blue sky and sunshine that everyone raves about. I believe, with Olive Schreiner, that there can be nothing like de-spar in the world as long as there are sunshiny afternoons."

"I wonder if you two sunshiny people would design to alight from this machine and eat dinner with us," smiled Bart as he drew up in front of the club house.
"Of course we will and thank you for it. Our capacity for enjoying the good things of life are enormous, Bart," and Larry paused to let that thought sink home. Then he added, "Alex and I appreciate roses and sunshine but we also appreciate good food. The wider one's range of appreciation of life's offerings the more one really lives."
The thought again passed through my mind that Larry was mature beyond his years.
"Do you regard food as an emotion?" said Bart cynically.
"No. I regard it as an appeal to the sense of taste just as sunshine and roses appeal to the senses of sight and feeling, and through these senses to one's love of the beautiful."
"You're hopeless, Larry. I am going to black-ball you as captain of the football team this fall. I'll do it reluctantly, but I'll have to do it for if you back in Alex's brand of sentimentality all summer, you won't be fit for a position that only a he-man can fill."
"Cease thy worries, Bart dear," said Bab sweetly. "This little summer's play is not going to harm Larry for any purely masculine diversion."
"What do you mean by that?" I asked Bab quickly.
"As an appeal to explanations as Bart is to analysis," countered Bab mysteriously. "I counted Bab mysteriously."
"Smell that coffee," said Bart. "I am going to have a planked steak. I am as hungry as a bear. Listening to a conversation of this kind always whets my appetite. It sort of gives me a hollow feeling that nothing can remove but food."
"And a good dinner always helps me to carry on a conversation of this kind," said Bab.
"I believe you could carry on a conversation on any subject if you were starving to death. You are one of those women who always make a man feel that you believe yourself his superior."
Bab and I exchanged glances. Bart had something to say.

FORD PRODUCING 4,000 CARS A DAY.
Present Production Greater Than for Same Period Last Year.
Ford is building cars at full speed. And, according to an official statement from the factory at Detroit, the demand for Ford cars and trucks still exceeds the output, despite the fact that a new high level of production has been reached.
By the first of May the figures representing daily production were in the neighborhood of 4,000 a day, so the May schedule was set at 101,225 cars and trucks, not including the output of the Ford Canadian plant or any of the foreign assembling plants. The output mounted daily; May 12th brought forth 4092, the greatest number that have been produced in one day so far this year. Since the month has 25 working days, present indications point to a new high record.
A comparison of Ford production figures for 1920 and 1921 discloses the fact that for April, 1921, the output was greater by 34,514 than for the corresponding month a year ago. The output for May, 1921, will probably overshadow May, 1920, by between fifteen and twenty thousand cars and trucks.
Approximately 43,000 men are at work in the Detroit plant of the Ford Motor company. The factory is operating on full time, six days a week and three shifts a day.
"We were never in a better condition than we are right now," said Henry Ford recently.

Retail prices in Dry Goods and Women's Wear are DOWN 30 per cent on the average on most things we sell, and in many cases more than HALF.
Most economists agree that we will not be back entirely to pre-war prices for some time, and it seems fair to assume that prices today are near a staple level.
