

The Sapphire Blue of Crater Lake

WORDS cannot adequately describe the beauties of Crater Lake. Its sapphire-blue coloring, its picturesque island and its gorgeous setting combine to make it one of nature's wonder spots.

Crater Lake is in the southern part of Oregon and is accessible by automobile from the Pacific Highway.

And motorists may plan a trip to Crater Lake with assurance because Red Crown Gasoline may be obtained all along the route—from north or south.

Make your trip with "Red Crown"—the gasoline of quality—the gasoline with a continuous chain of boiling points.

Look for the Red Crown sign on service stations and garages.

LARRY AS SECRETARY.

"Here's the secretary with his little old typewriter," called Larry jovially, through my sitting-room door.

I opened it just a crack and said, "Hush. You will awaken the baby."

As he came in I softly closed the door between the sitting room and the nursery. I had already arranged a table for him.

Then I laid the sheets of my manuscript beside him and said, "You can copy the story from this, Larry, and make a carbon."

"Oh, aren't you going to read it to me?" he said with evident disappointment.

"No, I have something else to do. In fact, I am going shopping."

I had to laugh at the sight of Larry's face. "Silly, I won't be gone long."

"I really think that you ought to learn to dictate, Alix. It will be so much easier for you. Of course you understand that I am not speaking for myself in this matter," he smiled a little wryly.

"I am going to try to learn to dictate," I said soberly, "but it would be very foolish for me to go over this story again. I have been writing a letter to go with it this morning and I hope to get them both off tonight."

"Nurse," I called, "please bring little Hal. I'll take him out with me on my shopping trip."

"I really don't think this secretarial position as nice as I thought it was going to be," smiled Larry, ruefully, as I went out, and after declining to let him carry Baby Hal down stairs to the front door.

"Where are you going, Alix?" asked Bab as I passed through the hall.

"Down to the shops and I am taking Hal with me."

"I think I will go with you, too," proposed Bab. "Duane said he was held at the office this morning and would not be able to play tennis with me."

"Do you think, Alix," Bab asked, "that it is just the thing to let Larry Wheaton hang around you all summer? Of course, you know he is younger than Bart and although he has plenty of money, yet I don't think that you would want to marry him. No woman should marry a man younger than herself."

"For the love of mercy, Bab, what are you talking about? Have you married on the brain? I tell you I don't intend to marry anyone. Larry looks upon me as someone he likes to talk to and who is perfectly harmless. Why he isn't through college yet. I wish I could forget marriage and everything that pertains to it. I am going to write stories, have a little home of my own and bring up Hal as well as I can and I am going to have men friends, scads of men, if they will let me, but I don't want always to be thinking that one of them or all of them, wants to marry me."

"Don't worry, they won't all want to marry you," she said with an accent on the marry."

"I don't understand what you mean by that," I said with dignity.

"I believe I told you yesterday that I hated explanations."

"Are we quarreling, Bab, over some foolish little thing that doesn't interest either of us?"

"We are not quarreling, Alix, but I am trying to tell you that you are going to have a proposal of marriage from Larry Wheaton before the summer is over and I think that if you do not intend to marry him, it is wrong to encourage him."

"Oh, he doesn't mean half he has been saying. He has probably told the same things to a lot of other women. He is one of the kind of men, Bab, who does a lot of practicing so that when the real girl comes he will be better perfect."

"Have it your own way, my dear. I don't see how you do it, though."

"Do what?" I asked.

"Charm every man who comes within a mile of you."

"Perhaps it is because I don't try to charm them. I've got to in here, Bab, to buy some blue ribbon for the baby's dresses. Are you coming in with me?"

"No, I'm going on to Robinson's. There is a sale of real lace on there today."

My errand was quickly finished and pushing little Hal before me, laughing and cooing in his carriage, I turned back home.

Almost unconsciously I hurried. I wanted to know how far Larry had gotten with the story.

When I came to my sitting room I found him busily writing. He didn't look up. "You have assumed your secretarial manner," I smiled.

"Yes, Madame," he answered with mock deference and handed me the sheets he had finished.

Before I read the first paragraph I said, "Please hand me my copy," and to my chagrin I found that he had transcribed it exactly as I had written.

Instead of finishing I went to my desk and hastily took out the copy of "Her Marriage." Finding the magazine in which the story was published, I proceeded to compare the two, and as I did so, I became more and more heartsick, more and more mortified and chagrined.

"Stop, Larry," I commanded. "It's no use, it's no use, I will never be able to write."

I'd walk a mile for a Camel

The pleasure is worth it. There's no substitute for Camel quality and that mild, fragrant Camel blend.

The fellow who smokes Camels, wants Camels. That's because Camels have a smoothness, a fragrance and a mildness you can't get in another cigarette.

Don't let anyone tell you that any other cigarette at any price is so good as Camels.

Let your own taste be the judge. Try Camels for yourself. A few smooth, refreshing puffs and you'd walk a mile for a Camel, too.

"OUR PRICES ARE DOWN TO A LEVEL Where You may Buy with Confidence"

Retail prices in Dry Goods and Women's Wear are DOWN 30 per cent on the average on most things we sell, and in many cases more than HALF.

Most economists agree that we will not be back entirely to pre-war prices for some time, and it seems fair to assume that prices today are near a staple level.

At this store you will always get full value for every dollar spent.
