

Alicia Hammersly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idah McGlone Gibson
The Roseburg Writer

Alix Meets Judge Turner.

After saying that I would be right down, I hurriedly put on my hat, and glancing in the mirror, I smiled, for I could see that I looked absurdly young as well as exceptionally well-groomed and not at all literary.

I smiled at myself in the mirror because my vanity was flattered and the smile brought a faint color to my cheeks just as the great pleasure of creative work had brought sparkle to my eyes.

"What have you been doing to yourself?" asked Mr. Early in the caressing voice of his. "I have never seen you look so well."

"You mustn't say such things to me, Mr. Early, particularly when I am going to meet people upon whom I wish to make a good impression. You will make me self-conscious."

"No," he answered, "for I have rarely seen a less self-conscious person than you."

"You have seen so little of me that you should not judge."

"I have seen you every moment, dear lady, since we first met."

I was beginning to feel uncomfortable when a voice said, "Hello, Early, I have been looking for you all day. Couldn't get you at the office. Left word that you should call me. Didn't your secretary tell you?"

"Yes, Judge, she told me, but at the moment I was busy and afterwards it slipped my mind."

"Well, I am leaving in a day or two and if you want that interview and story you will have to send some one tomorrow to get it."

"I will be glad to do that, Judge, and have in Mrs. Hammersly the person that I am going to send to you for it. Mrs. Hammersly let me present Judge Turner."

Before my eyes had traveled to his face, I knew it was my only man and I did not need the kindly glance of his eyes or the somewhat quizzical smile to tell me that he believed I was utterly inadequate for the task to which Mr. Early had assigned me.

Judge Turner, however, was polite enough not to voice his thoughts. With some commonplace remark he prefaced the announcement that he would see me the next day.

"May I make it four o'clock?" I asked quite angry at myself because my voice quivered.

Mr. Early interrupted by saying that I had recently joined the staff of the magazine and the next morning if it would not discommode the judge to wait until four, would probably be given over by Mrs. Hammersly to apartment hunting.

"I would suit me perfectly," said the judge, "as I have an engagement which will probably take me through and after luncheon." Then, with a cheery "Until four, Mrs. Hammersly," he left us.

"I am afraid of him," I said. "He is the great Judge Turner, is he not, that handed down that decision in the railroad merger case?"

"Yes, he is the most forward-looking man that I know today, and we are anxious to exploit his ideas in the magazine."

"But I know nothing about him and little of his work. I am sure that I cannot do this, Mr. Early."

"Yes you can. You can write just the kind of a human story we want."

I thought of the description of the man I had written which was lying upstairs on my writing desk and thought possibly I could. But I said nothing further on the subject.

"Do you care to ride? The offices are only a short distance," said Mr. Early as we reached the sidewalk.

"I would much rather walk. You know I am used to much exercise and I am afraid here I shall miss it."

I don't mind confessing that it was a very much frightened person who was taken around from office to office and desk to desk and introduced to the magazine staff. I could see from the faces that there had been such curiosity about me, and I felt that I had been talked over a great deal. However, everyone—men and women—greeted me pleasantly with but one exception.

Having met the people with whom I was to work, I had gained the impression that I was going to be happy in my new work when Mr. Early said, "I will now show you your own desk, Mrs. Hammersly."

Upon seeing it, I turned and said, "You are very thoughtful and I want to thank you for the flowers. I have been saying to myself all morning that earning one's living is not such a formidable thing after all."

"I am sure, Mrs. Hammersly, you will enjoy working," he answered. Then he added: "Perhaps you would like to see my offices—and by the way, I would like to have you dine with me." He opened the connect ing door and ushered me into an office a little larger but furnished in the same way as the rest.

As we came in I felt rather than heard a slight exclamation and turned as Mr. Early said, "Mrs. Hammersly, this is my secretary, Miss Belcher."

The woman came forward with feline grace. She ignored my extended hand and I felt myself in the presence of one who for some reason I could not understand was my enemy.

Tomorrow—The Interested Secretary.

Road work in this vicinity is progressing nicely. In a few days the surface between town and the pavement will be macadamized.

Mrs. Mayor Mary Hart was selected to make one of the addresses at the Wilbur Academy reunion exercises.

Plans are being perfected for Yoncalla's Fourth of July celebration. The plans are for an old-fashioned celebration for the day's sake. A patriotic program in the forenoon, a community basket lunch at noon, local sports, etc., in the afternoon. The grove on Mr. Gross' place has been secured as the place. William Hillwell, Hon. Mrs. Mayor Hart, G. B. Bunyan, W. L. Rupprecht are the committee.

Memorial day was fittingly observed in Yoncalla by a program which was very well rendered by the schools under direction of Mrs. Wilson. Mrs. Miller and Miss Slaver, teachers, and a patriotic address by the Rev. C. G. Morris, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, which was of a very high order and enthusiastically received. Mr. Morris spoke feelingly in memory of those who sacrificed that we might enjoy our present privileges and eloquently pleaded for a strong patriotism.

Interest is keen in regard to the road bond election and while there is some opposition, those favorable and who see the need are confident the proposition will carry.

The baccalaureate services for the graduating class of the high school will be preached by Rev. C. G. Morris in the Methodist church Sunday, June 12.

Amplifying Device To Convey Music

The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company is installing and will operate for the benefit of the Rose Festival and the thousands of visitors during Rose Festival week in Portland a sound amplifying equipment which will convey to and distribute over the festival center grounds musical programs, addresses, announcements, etc., from distant locations about the city.

Two experts from the east have been in Portland for the last two weeks installing the necessary apparatus in order to furnish this unique entertainment to the visitors during Rose Festival week. The festival committee is arranging to feature this apparatus as the means of entertainment to all visitors. Hereafter an address or a musical program has been available only to the limited number who could crowd in a hall or within the range of a speaker's voice. With the amplifying apparatus furnished by the telephone company a complete address or musical program will be spread over an area of several city blocks and everyone who wishes to be able to understand every word spoken and hear every musical note of the program.

The apparatus consists of a system of motors, generators, wires, transmitters, amplifiers and other electrical equipment weighing several tons and filling several rooms. The machinery is very delicate requiring the utmost care in its operation. A drop of water at a certain point or a piece of metal the size of a pin head will put the whole plant out of business. The transmitter, amplifier and horns are very delicately adjusted and sensitive to the slightest change in current and resistance in the circuits. None of the apparatus will be visible at the festival center except the suspended horns and will give the impression of sound created out of the air.

This apparatus was given its greatest outdoor test at the inauguration of President Harding in Washington on March 4, where the voice of President Harding in the inaugural address was distributed over a radius of six blocks from the Capitol steps and could even be heard distinctly on the steps of the congressional library more than 1200 feet from the inaugural platform. At all previous presidential inaugurations only a few hundred people who were fortunate enough to secure positions directly in front of and near the inaugural platform were able to hear the inaugural address, but on March 4 with the amplifier apparatus in service on the Capitol grounds, 125,000 people, the largest crowd that ever heard one man's voice at one time distinctly heard every word of President Harding's address. It is this same apparatus which has been forwarded to Portland and will be placed in service for the entertainment of those who attend the Rose Festival on June 5 and 6.

The offer of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company to furnish and operate this apparatus for the Rose Festival committee will insure a distinctly new entertainment feature for the Rose show. The high expense for installation of the necessary electrical apparatus has precluded the use of this equipment at any except the largest and most notable gatherings, such as the Republican and Democratic convention last year and the inaugural ceremonies for President Harding. The Rose Festival committee is to be congratulated on their success in securing this as the greatest entertainment feature of the 1931 festival.

TOOK OATH 'BY THE PEACOCK'

When Philip of Burgundy and His Knights Vowed to Engage to War for Holy Land.

In 1433 Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, vowed "by the peacock" to go to the deliverance of Constantinople, which had recently fallen into the hands of the Turks. At the conclusion of the tournament and banquet held by the duke at Lille, Holy Mother Church, in the guise of a lady in mourning seated on an elephant and escorted by a giant, approached the duke and delivered a long verified complaint, claiming the aid and succor of the Knights of the Golden Fleece.

The herald advanced, bearing on his fist a live peacock or pheasant, which, according to the rites of chivalry, he presented to the duke. At this extraordinary summons Philip, a wise and aged prince, engaged his person and powers in the holy war against the Turks. His example was imitated by the barons and knights of the assembly; they swore to God, the Virgin, the ladies, and the peacock.

In this connection will be recalled "Peacock's brilliant charade, 'The Peacock and the Ladies.'"

HELPING HAND CLUB MEETS.

The Helping Hand Club held a very interesting meeting at the home of Mrs. Conrad Long June 2. The house was attractively decorated with large bouquets of roses, poppies and locust. The greater part of the afternoon was spent in placing a very pretty quilt. A very delicious lunch was served, consisting of sandwiches, two kinds of cake, coffee, cocoa, and ice cream and strawberries. Mrs. Long was assisted in serving by her mother, Mrs. McComas and sister, May.

Before leaving a very pleasant half hour was spent in music and singing old time hymns. Everyone was glad to have Mrs. W. R. Vinson with them again and that she is gradually regaining her strength. The next meeting will be held June 16 at the home of Mrs. H. Paulsen.
