

Mount Rainier
(also called Mount Tacoma),
Rainier
National Park,
Washington

Gorgeous Mt. Rainier

Mount Rainier is 14,408 feet above the sea-level—the second highest mountain peak in the United States. It is the center of Rainier National Park, Washington—and is situated about seventy-five miles by road east of Tacoma.

This remarkable mountain is of volcanic origin and is now crowned with snow and ice, having the most extensive glaciers to be found in the United States.

The National Parks Highway leads directly from Tacoma to Rainier National Park, and at Longmire Springs—within the Park boundaries—is a Standard Oil service station ready to serve motorists with Red Crown Gasoline.

Wherever you tour in Washington you will see the Red Crown sign on service stations and garages. It is the sign of quality in gasoline.

Alicia Hammerly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Leah McGlone Gibson
The Rising Writer

The Interested Secretary.

I have often wondered whether some people impress others, as they often do me, with their resemblance to animals. Miss Belcher, for all her good looks—and in her way she was handsome—made me think of a cat. She had the same sleepy expression in her eyes. She instinctively stood in the warm place in the room. Her very voice had a purring sound, especially when speaking to Mr. Early. Her hands opened and shut with that feline gesture which made you feel that underneath there were claws which might hurt if you encountered them.

"Miss Belcher has been with me some years," said Mr. Early. "She knows my business quite as well as I do and I sometimes tell her that she probably could run the magazine without me better than I could without her."

"One could almost see Miss Belcher physically swell with pride at the encomiums of her employer. But it struck me that Mr. Early had some ulterior motive for the compliment beside a tribute to a trusted employee."

"Were you not in the building? Why did you not come in to tea with Mrs. Hammerly?" he said to her. And in his voice there was a shade of disapprobation at which she almost seemed to cringe.

"I had some important letters to write and did not realize the passing of time until I heard you in the next room and knew that tea was finished. However, I promise Mrs. Hammerly will see enough of me in the future if she is to have the adjoining office," purred Miss Belcher.

"I am sure that Miss Belcher will be glad to help you in any way possible," said Mr. Early, turning to me. "And I hope I will not make her too much trouble."

The secretary made no comment on these polite amenities.

Mr. Early seated himself at his desk and was rapidly going over some letters that had been placed in orderly piles before him. I could see that he would be busy for quite a while and said most innocently: "I see, Mr. Early, that you are going to be engaged for some time. I know the way back to the hotel and I would like to change my dress before going to dinner with you."

For some reason which I could not define I looked quickly at Miss Belcher as I spoke. Her eyes had narrowed until they were mere slits, through which a baneful green light scintillated. Her hands were clasped and unclasped in a way which almost made my flesh creep.

Mr. Early noticed nothing of this. Man-like, he had entirely forgotten his host for an instant and he concentrated his whole attention upon the work before him.

"If you wish," said Miss Belcher suddenly, "I will go with you to your hotel. I have finished my work now and my way home is in that direction."

"Although I know the way I shall be glad of your company," I said as courteously as possible for my antipathy for the woman was so strong that I did not want to be near her even on a public street.

"I'll call for you at seven," said Mr. Early. "That will give us time to eat dinner and go to the theatre if you care to."

"I don't believe I can go to the theatre, Mr. Early, as I have telegraphed my mother to call me up by phone at eight o'clock. You see this is the first time that I have ever left my baby for any length of time and I cannot help being anxious."

Mr. Early frowned and Miss Belcher smiled. Both frown and smile gave me the same uncomfortable feeling.

"Have you known Mr. Early long?" asked Miss Belcher as we reached the street.

"I never met him until the other day. He seemed pleased with my stories and told me that it was the opinion of the staff that I might possibly fill the place which he has offered me."

"Opinion of the staff?" repeated Miss Belcher. "You will not be here long before you realize, Mrs. Hammerly, that the opinion of any one or everyone on the staff of the magazine means nothing to Roland Early if he makes up his mind to do anything."

"I hope there were no objections to me, Miss Belcher."

"Oh, I was not speaking personally at all. I was just giving you one of the characteristics of our mutual employer."

"Thank you," I said dryly.

We were nearing the hotel and we walked on in silence until we reached the doorway, when Miss Belcher unexpectedly held out her hand, and said: "Good night, Mrs. Hammerly. I hope you will have a pleasant time and not be too lonely without your baby."

"I shall be lonely without him, but I expect to have him with me very soon. I intend looking for an apartment, the first thing in the morning and hope that I shall have my son and his nurse with me before the end of the week."

When I reached my room I found a telegram from mother in answer to mine telling me that the baby was all right and that it was unnecessary and inconvenient to call me at that time as she was going out.

Quickly I got out from my trunk one of my simple white crepe evening dresses and when Mr. Early's name was sent up, I was ready—and had the pleasant consciousness that he would not be ashamed of my appearance anywhere.

Faded Eyes of Ex-Empress Saw Many Tragedies

(By United Press.)
BRUSSELS, June 7.—Forming the sole remaining link with the reign of the late King Leopold of Belgium, the Ex-Empress Charlotte of Mexico, attained her 81st birthday today.

This winter the aged princess, who was the late King Leopold's sister was within an ace of paying the last debt of nature, in fact, at the end of January the doctors almost gave up hope of saving her, but the iron will that stamps every member of the Saxe-Coburg family carried her through, as much as medical skill, and she is now tolerably well, although her entourage admits she is likely to pass away at any moment.

The ex-Empress has probably lived through more royal tragedy and court scandal than any other European princess. Her husband, the ill-fated Emperor Maximilian, was shot by Mexican insurrectionists after a very brief imperial stay, in 1867, when his wife was only 27. She returned nerve-shattered, to Belgium where her brother, King Leopold's generous provision enabled her to live in comfortable retirement.

Family trouble in the household of the late King swept round her, however. Leopold's illicit love; the sale of his dead queen's diadem; the lawsuits of his two elder daughters; the wild tales surrounding the death of his son; the death-bed scandal with the royal paramour, etc., all helped to increase the sadness of her life.

Now in her sylvan retreat at Bouchoit, the aged ex-Empress knows little of how the world wags, and is more or less a prisoner in her castle with its spacious grounds. She knows that the war is over. At the actual outbreak of hostilities, the news was hidden from the old lady for a long time, a deception which was aided by the fact that all the royal chateaux in Belgium, her castle alone was respected by the Germans, on account of her German origin.
