

What do you know about the oil you are using?

Is it a wholly-distilled, non-compounded product, free from elements that cause hard carbon deposits?

Does it maintain a perfect piston-ring seal, thus preventing waste of power and leakage of gasoline into the crankcase?

Does it protect the bearings against excess friction and wear?

If it fails in one or all of these particulars, your oil is wrong in quality or type.

SUNOCO Motor Oil, with its six distinct types and exclusive qualities, insures a right oil for your car. Try SUNOCO and be convinced.

Judge Turner Phones.

I thought a great deal about the complications and complexities in Mr. Early's life and while I could see no particular harm in his dining with me in a public room to talk over business, I did think that he had been very remiss in not telling me that he was married and allowing me to be the judge, under the circumstances accept or decline his invitation.

Right at the outset of my business career I found that it was as impossible to ignore sex in business as it was to ignore it in any other walk of life. I saw how futile the cry of the would-be emancipated woman who is always saying, "There is no sex in brain."

While listening to the conversation of Judge Turner and Mr. Early last night, I realized, subconsciously probably, that there is sex in brain, and now I found that it was not to be ignored even between men and women who were brought together in a purely business relationship.

I also knew that Miss Belcher in her prudish way would be the first to proclaim her association with Mr. Early as free from all sentiment when she had proven to me that morning, by her gossip and adverse criticism of Mrs. Early, that the facts were quite otherwise.

I wondered whether I had made a wise choice. Would it not have been better had I stayed in the seclusion and protection of my father's home and written my stories? The ringing of my telephone interrupted my meditations and Judge Turner's voice came to me over the wire.

"I am all ready and waiting to be interviewed, Mrs. Hammerly. Shall we make it a luncheon engagement? Ask Early to come too, if you wish," he added as I hesitated a moment.

"Mr. Early has gone to Chicago."

"Oh, Lilla is worse then."

"There was a note of real regret in Judge Turner's voice, which prompted me, by way of explaining the previous evening, to say: "I did not know until this morning that Mr. Early was married. Then I learned the reason for his departure was his wife's illness."

"I know that, my dear girl, perfectly, the moment I came over to your table last night. Of course it was for Rol to tell you whatever he wanted to about his own affairs, but I considered that it was taking advantage of you, under the circumstances."

"I knew you thought I was rude to invite myself to the dinner, but I intended to explain to you later, or at least to make Rol explain to you. But it is all right now and I hope that when Lilla recovers and comes back here you will meet her, although she goes very little. Rol told you about her, of course, before he went away."

"I didn't see him this morning. Mr. Early's secretary mentioned that there was a paragraph in the paper last evening, saying that his wife was ill.

"I always knew that Belcher woman was a cat."

"May I ask you a question, Judge Turner?"

"Over the phone, young lady?"

"Yes, why not?"

"Are you the youngest judge on the bench?"

"Why do you ask me that?"

"Because you talk like a college boy. Few men would have called Miss Belcher a cat."

"Isn't she?" he countered.

"Well, you are a judge."

"Come on to lunch and we will talk it over."

"I will if you will promise not to be called out of town by a sick wife."

"No such chance. I have been a widower, my dear girl, ten years. I wish you might have met my wife. You would have liked her. I will be waiting for you in the lobby of the hotel. If you have a little time, let's motor out to Seaside Inn."

"I have all the time in the world, my dear Judge. And besides, you know this is really my work. Expect me in fifteen minutes."

Going to the door opening into Mr. Early's office, I said: "I am going out to luncheon now, Miss Belcher, and I may not be in this afternoon."

"Have you forgotten your engagement with Judge Turner, Mrs. Hammerly? I understand that it is today, and that it was rather important."

"No, I haven't forgotten it, Miss Belcher."

"Oh, I beg your pardon. I thought possibly the unexpected absence of Mr. Early might have taken it from your mind."

"I knew he was going, Miss Belcher."

"I could see that she was consumed with curiosity and I smiled without thinking until I found that my smile irritated her more than ever."

"I expect," she said, "that you are going to look for an apartment."

"Perhaps."

"Would you like me to go with you? I know the city very well."

"Thank you very much, Miss Belcher, but Alice Gordon has offered to take me."

"She is not at liberty just now. I saw her heading proof on some rush copy."

"Well, I am going to wait upon her convenience." With this I went out and spoke to Alice Gordon.

From the first I had felt drawn to her. Her low, sweet voice with sadness in its cadence, appealed to me. I wanted her for a friend.

After she had promised to go with me later on in the afternoon, I said: "Mrs. Gordon, will you go into Mr. Early's office in a few minutes and tell Miss Belcher that I have gone to luncheon with Judge Turner?"

She looked up into my face and laughed. "Of course I will, with pleasure."

Tomorrow—Lunch With Judge Turner.
