

Alicia Hammerly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Ida McGee Gibson

From a Train Window.

As I sat in the train window, I thought more about my way back to the city than I did of anything else. I did not feel as if I were alone, but as if I were surrounded by a crowd of people. I felt as if I were being watched, and I felt as if I were being judged. I felt as if I were being criticized, and I felt as if I were being laughed at. I felt as if I were being scorned, and I felt as if I were being despised. I felt as if I were being hated, and I felt as if I were being loathed. I felt as if I were being reviled, and I felt as if I were being blasphemed. I felt as if I were being cursed, and I felt as if I were being damned. I felt as if I were being damned to hell, and I felt as if I were being damned to hell for ever and ever. I felt as if I were being damned to hell for ever and ever, and I felt as if I were being damned to hell for ever and ever.

man gave the characteristic shrug of the Latin race, and, waving his hand to us, he threw his arm around her shoulders and turning her around kissed her full upon the lips.

For a moment I envied them. All the world was theirs and they were together. Neither had known the great loneliness or heartaches or the pangs of separation. Love lightened the load they carried until the heavy hand-organ strapped to the man's back was a feather and the girl's dancing feet stopped just for a moment as they stepped around the corner—long enough for her to lay her head against the shoulder of her man and again lift her lips to his.

I felt my cheeks grow hot as I wondered if it were the ghost of Larry's kiss that made that glimpse of Vagabondia seem so entrancing.

As if she knew of whom I was thinking, Alice Gordon said: "What a nice boy young Mr. Wheaton is. If I were to have a son, I would like him to be just like 'Larry,' as you call him."

"Larry is a dear," I answered in a voice that I tried to make sound casual. "He makes me forget I am a widow with the responsibility of a child upon my shoulders. And sometimes for this I am profoundly grateful. And sometimes I am, alas, a little remorseful."

I looked over at little Hal, who was none the worse for the adventure which had brought me back home in such a hurry and of which he was blissfully unconscious. Some day I would probably laugh with him over his "kidnapping," and call it a tempest in a teapot, but now it was very real and tragic to me. Hal was cooling and crowing in Hannah's arms while she fairly gloated over him.

Some time he would be grown, this boy of mine, and some time he would be saying words of love to some girl. I felt a little tightening about my heart at the thought. Would I want the woman to whom Hal would first make love to be like me?

I determined then and there that, because of my own boy, Larry Wheaton should never regret having known me.

I still held to the theory of keeping Larry as honest and true as he was at this moment, for the real girl and I did not doubt my ability to keep affairs on the same footing as now for some time to come. But I really prayed with trembling lips to have the strength to send Larry from me, if at any time I felt that he was not more in love with love than he was with me.

Again I asked myself if I had really loved Hal, my husband, or if the peculiar circumstances surrounding his death had left me in doubt as to his love for me. I sincerely thought I had loved my husband while he was alive. But, looking across to where Alice sat in the drawing room of the car, I began almost to doubt it, for I could see that her greatest joy when away from her husband was in thinking of him, while I at times did not want to remember. She was perfectly content to be silent and to dream. I doubt if she saw any of the charming landscape that made a moving picture past the window of our car.

She only saw a room in which a man was stretched on a bed of helplessness, waiting for her homecoming. I loved to watch her eyes grow tender as she pictured this place halloved by the greatest love and most splendid devotion I had ever known in man or woman.

She told me many of the little details of her married life on this trip—a life as different as possible from the one she lived daily at the office, and I wondered whether, had I been Hal's mistress, instead of his possession, I would not have loved him more.

A woman, they say, always loves the thing she mothers most.

SAYS RIDDLE WON BALL GAME SUNDAY.

Riddle, Ore., June 21, 1921. Editor News-Review:

I notice that Mr. Hogan says that the baseball game between Oakland and Riddle on June 19 was a tie. For the benefit of the public I will explain the play in this way: The base umpire says that the man on home was safe, by rule 55 in Spalding rule book. Therefore the final score was and is 4-3 in Riddle's favor.

THE U. S. USCO TREAD

Here is the U. S. Usco Tread, with a long-established standard of service among motorists who have an eye to value, as well as to price. While selling for less than the other tires in the U. S. Fabric line, the Usco has earned a reputation for quality and dependable economy which is not exceeded by any tire in its class.

"Fresh, live U. S. Tires come direct to the dealer from his neighboring Factory Branch."

Which one of your neighbors gets the best mileage out of his tires?

EVERY once in a while you hear a motorist say as he kicks a rear tire with an admiring foot, "there's a lucky tire!" Give him a chance and he'll tell you all about it. And then you'll find that what he calls "luck" is simply his first experience with a quality standard tire.

It all comes to this—buy a U. S. Tire anywhere in this country and you get definite, predictable value for your money no matter what weight car you drive.

The man who has been guessing his way through "overstocks," "discontinued lines," "job lots" and the like, will find it refreshing to talk with the local U. S. Tire dealer who is concentrating on a full, completely sized line of U. S. Tires.

For the first time he will hear some straight quality tire facts—and get the difference between chance and certainty in tire buying.

The U. S. Tires he sees in stock are fresh, live tires. They come direct to the dealer from his neighboring Factory Branch.

There are 92 of these Branches established and maintained by the U. S. Tire makers.

Giving your dealer a continuous moving stock of new, fresh tires built on the certainty of quality first every time
