Alicia Hammerly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idaho McClure Gibson
The Red Writer

An Unconventional Idea.

"Bart," said Larry when he could make himself heard above Bart's laughter at the idea of Roland Early being a devoted husband "your slang and boisterousness went well while you were in college, but now that you have been graduated you should take on the actions and appearance of a gentleman even if you do not feel like one."

Bart contented himself with a great slap on Larry's back and the admonition: "Go to it, old man!
Go to it! Dignity becomes you." Then, turning to me, he asked:
"What have you planned for us, Alix? We have got to get busy.
We've only a little while to stay in the big town."

"Suppose we take a car out to the shore for dinner tonight," I replied.
"You can dance if you wish and we can make our plans there. But I give you fair warning that I do not know any girls for you to dance with. I have been too busy to make any acquaintances."

"You have been altogether too busy, Alix," said Bart as he affectionately put his arms about my shoulders. "It is all very well for you, my dear, to think that you are going to be able to shut yourself up and write the rest of your life away, but it can't be done—not at your age and with your beauty. Where's Larry?" he asked abruptly and we both noticed Larry had vanished.

"Here I am," called Larry from the nursery and we went in to find my boy laughing in high glee as Larry tossed him up in the air to the great consternation of Hannah.

"Little Hal is just as cunning as ever, Alix. If you don't mind, Bart, I'll spend my week with him," added Larry tantalizingly.

"Yes, you will—not. You were determined to come to the big town and now you have got to play the game."

I looked at Larry in surprise. I did not know that it was he who had suggested coming to the "big town," as Bart called it. He said nothing however, until a little later when Bart had gone out to see about a taxicab.

"Aren't you glad to see me, Alix?" he asked. "I was hungry for a sight of you and little Hal, so I persuaded Bart to come. He really thinks the idea was his, although he likes to accuse me of it."

"I haven't found the real girl yet that you promised me. Up to date you are still the only girl I want."

"Larry, you heard what Bart said about Mr. Early. Perhaps ten years ago Roland Early thought Mrs. Early was the real girl. She is ten years older than Mr. Early, Larry."

"That has nothing to do with our case. You are barely three years older than I am."

"But Larry—"

"Look over there," he interrupted as he pointed across the street. A man and woman, in the garb of gypsies, were playing a hurdy-gurdy, or rather the man was turning the crank, but the woman was singing and shaking her tambourine. She was obviously the older and much the better looking of the two.

"Don't you see, dear, that they are happy? A few years' difference in their ages means nothing to them.
They have all the sunshine in the world; they have all the earth on which to wander. If society disowns them by the same token they ignore society."

"Larry," I said suddenly remembering the man and woman that I had seen from the car window at the station, "I wish that you and I could go unfettered and free as those two people out there for just one day.
I am so tired of not only doing the things that the world approves, but also always having to do them in just the way the world desires."

Larry left me suddenly. I held my breath in suspense. I had an intuition that he was going to do some peculiarly boyish and peculiarly foolish thing and I found myself eager to aid him.

I watched him cross the street. I saw him go up to the gypsies and, after a little talk, I saw Larry give the man some money. In exchange he gave Larry his torn, velvet jacket.
The woman looked up to the window where I was standing and, smiling she handed Larry her tambourine.
As he came back across the road, he met Bart at the door and the two boys came into my apartment with a great clatter.

"She'll never do it," I heard Bart say.

"Yes, she will," answered Larry.
"I'll just bet you fifty dollars, which is half of all I have in the world, that Alix hasn't the nerve," asserted Bart.

"Alix hasn't the nerve to do what?"

"Why, Larry says that you and he are going to take that hurdy-gurdy about town for a day and test what this perfect freedom from all conventions means. I have just bet him fifty dollars that you wouldn't do it."

"You lose, Bart," I said quickly.
"Wait, Larry, until I get on something gypsy-like, and away we go."

"But I thought we were going out to the shore for dinner," objected Bart.

"Oh, don't worry. We'll join you at the hotel about eight o'clock.
We'll probably be tired of our masquerade by that time."

"Trust you, Larry, but not that much," grinned Bart. "I am going to follow along behind you to see that you don't park that hand organ in some secluded place and then get into your own clothes again with my fifty dollars in your pocket." Tomorrow—A Fantastic Adventure.

TRUANTS KEEP EYES ON CARS

"Hooker" Dangerous in Seattle Since They Motorized Attendance Officers.

Ask any kid in Seattle who has a tendency to play hooky once in a while and he will tell you that he always keeps a sharp lookout for Dodge Brothers touring cars and roadsters.

Reason—this is the type of car used by the eight attendance officers of the Seattle school board, who scour the city constantly for symptoms of juvenile delinquency.

More than once one of these cars has pulled alongside the curb or glided on to the swimmin' hole to the great dismay of the youngster who remained out of school to attend his grandmother's funeral. Outsourced the truant officer and before Johnny could move he was under cross-examination.

New the Seattle school board has made it a little easier for Johnny by giving him a reasonable chance to "sluck." The board has ordered that cars used by attendance officers be plainly lettered in conformity with the style of lettering on all other cars owned by the school district.
When this action was proposed it brought forth a sharp and insistent protest by one of the school officials.
The objection was reported by a Seattle paper as follows:

"Mr. Fleming said in his communication of protest that as Dodge Brothers cars are used exclusively by the department, any Dodge Brothers car is instantly the object of suspicion on the part of the juvenile population of a community. To make them more conspicuous by lettering would be merely adding to the troubles of an overburdened and unappreciative public servant. But the protest was overruled."

The Seattle police department also uses 10 Dodge Brothers touring cars.
The various departments of the city and county together operate 37.

Little wonder the small boy regards the familiar "D.B." monogram with suspicion.

DESTROY GLASS TO KILL BEER SIGNS

(By United Press).
BUFFALO, June 29.—Destruction of thousands of dollars worth of fancy stained glass that adorns Buffalo's cratwhale saloons depends on a decision soon to be made by City Judge Woltz.

Recently a police captain was passing a soft drink establishment that at one time was one of America's many watering troughs and his eagle eye caught sight of a sign which had been worked into the stained window. The sign read:
"Wines and Liquors."

The captain arrested the proprietor of the establishment and he pleaded guilty of having glass bearing such legends. It was argued that such signs are now against the law and Judge Woltz took the case under advisement.

Should the judge rule that the sign is unlawful, it will mean that hundreds of similar fancy glass signs that now embellish soft drink places that once were saloons will have to be destroyed.
