

MODERN CRANKCASE CLEANING SERVICE

We use CALOR FLUSHING OIL and ZEROLINE

How often should your crankcase be CLEANED?

Automobile manufacturers carefully recommend, in their Books of Instruction, regular draining and cleaning of the crankcase.

This is necessary because engine operation causes road dust, carbon, fine metal particles and other impurities to accumulate in your crankcase oil. This gritty oil circulates through your engine, impairs its performance and ultimately leads to rapid depreciation and repairs.

To meet this need, Modern Crankcase Cleaning Service has been established by first-class garages and other dealers, co-operating with the Standard Oil Company. These garages and dealers use Calor Flushing Oil—the scientific agent that cleans out old oil, dirt, grit and other impurities, and does not impair the lubricating efficiency of fresh oil used. The cleaned crankcase is refilled with the correct grade of Zeroline.

Look for the garage or dealer displaying the sign shown above,—it means "Better operation and longer engine life."

Cherries Shipped In Carload Lots

It has been proven definitely this year that cherries can be shipped long distances in large lots. The Oregon Growers Cooperative Association has shipped over 300 tons of Royal Annes to eastern markets this season. This variety of cherry has been harvested and the black cherries are coming in now.

The association has been shipping Lamberts in car lots this year and they are the first to go from Salem to the east in solid cars. The fruit has to be sorted with extreme care as only the best will stand the long trip and the packages were labeled with the Misdand brand which is the mark of the highest quality put out by the Oregon Growers Cooperative Association.

Reports show that the cars are going through in good shape and that the fruit is standing up well on the long trip. The association is doing everything in its power to put Oregon fruit on eastern markets in such a way that the growers will receive the best returns for their products and Oregon fruit will come to be known as the best on the market.

"MAILED FIST" FOR SALE

BERLIN, July 13.—(U. P.)—The mailed fist of the German emperor is offered for sale in Berlin.

The ex-empress August having heard her husband mentioning the "mailed fist" and the "shining armour" repeatedly during his famous speeches which enlightened the world has made up her mind to make Willy an extraordinary birthday present. She gave an order to a famous English silversmith to make an image of that "mailed fist" of solid silver.

The iron fist arrived in good time and August placed it on the breakfast table of the Kaiser. It was expedited somewhat speedily into the corner by the receiver who for some reason did not seem to be pleased with the present. From here it was picked up quietly by the Empress and sold later to a man who is in possession of it today. Since he is a good patriot—and a business man—he is trying to sell it, preferably to an American.

Movie Closeups

Rudolph Valentino, who enacts the leading male role of Julio in Metro's colossal production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibañez, also plays opposite Alice Lake in her new starring picture, "Uncharted Seas," which will be shown at the Majestic theater tonight.

Mr. Valentino is seen as a young sea captain in "Uncharted Seas," a story from the pen of John Fleming Wilson, and adapted for the screen by Elwood Jenkins. Bayard Veiller, director of productions at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., considers "Uncharted Seas" the best story Mr. Wilson ever has written. Wesley Ruggles directed the photoplay.

The story centers about a girl whose husband proves himself worthless, despite her efforts to reclaim him. The youth's trail by his wife and father and the success of a second man, go to make "Uncharted Seas" a thrilling tale of the sea. Much of the early part of the story takes place about San Francisco harbor.

A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idah McGhee Gibson
The Head Writer

A Surprise for Roland Early.

We were in my little living room when Roland Early asserted that I knew that he was in love with me. As he spoke I sat down heavily in a nearby chair, and he, taking it as an invitation, seated himself in a great arm chair beside me.

For a moment I was so enraged that I could not speak. This was twice in twenty-four hours that I had been told that I knew of the love of a married man for me and each time there was at least a slight intimation that I had encouraged this love.

Mr. Early seemed to have misconstrued my silence, for he continued to look at me with a most possessive tenderness.

Finally I got my vocal cords into such control that I felt I could speak without my voice trembling, and I said: "It is very strange that two people should feel themselves better able to gauge my knowledge of your regard for me than I am myself. It is also strange that both should take it upon themselves to inform me of that knowledge upon the same day."

"Who else has said that I love you?" he demanded in alarm. It was apparent that he did not want the world to know it, however, much he flaunted it before my eyes. "Was it that fresh young pop-in-jay who strutted about town with you in that spiky garb?"

"No, Mr. Early, Larry never mentioned your name. He classes you with his father. It never enters his mind that to me, as well as to him, you are not an old man who has finished with love and youthful passion. Larry is really young and he brings a splendidly fresh outlook into my life."

I purposely made this as insulting as I could and I saw Roland Early wince. I even caught him surreptitiously looking into the long mirror that was across the room.

What he saw there evidently reassured him (he was a splendid looking man at the zenith of mature manhood and vigor), for he smiled tolerantly. Then I saw his face change again as he inquired:

"Have you seen Jeff Turner since he returned?"

"No," I answered, "and if I had, Judge Turner would not have had the effrontery to say to me that I knew you or any other man was in love with me."

"Except himself," interrupted Mr. Early.

I allowed this to go unchallenged, for, to tell the truth, my literary instincts were getting the best of any personal interest I might have in his conversation and I decided, as I had in the interview with his wife, to let him rave on. Both were new types to me.

"Well," asserted Mr. Early, "whoever told you that I was in love with you and that you knew it spoke the truth. Why, girl, I have loved you every minute since the first time I saw you. You must have seen what a hopeless thing it was from the very first for me to put you out of my life. Heaven knows I have tried hard enough to forget you. This is why I persuaded my wife to go to Chicago to a sanitarium. I wanted an excuse to get away from you, Alix, but I found through those long months of torture that it was no use. I love you, Alix, love you as I have never loved before."

"So your wife told me."

Roland Early jumped up from his seat and came over to me, his face pale. "Have you gone mad, Alix, or have I? What do you mean by saying that my wife told you? What did she tell? When did she tell it to you and where? Your talk is irrational."

"I am perfectly normal, Mr. Early."

"But Alix, you cannot mean that you have been talking with my wife, and that she has told you that I was in love with you. You have never seen my wife—nor she you."

"I had never seen her until last night. Then she came here and in this room said precisely the words that I have just repeated to you."

At this Roland Early almost wilted in his chair.

"Why should I be subjected to all these dramas by you and your wife?" I remonstrated before he could again speak. "Truly I feel almost indecent—not because of my gypsy prank with Larry, which you came here to find fault with me about, but because I have put myself in a position where I have not only listened to protestations of love from a married man, but also to the frantic appeals of his wife to leave him alone."

"Do you realize, Mr. Early, that your wife came to me late last night and told me that you had asked her to divorce you; that you had found a woman that you could not live without and her whole plea was, 'Give him back to me, give him back?'" My voice broke with the shame of it all and I trembled visibly.

"What possessed her to do this?" Roland Early spoke to himself rather than to me, apparently dazed by the unexpected turn of our interview. Things were not going as he had planned. For the first time in his life he had found that he did not know the woman he had married.

"I am sure Mrs. Early did not know that you existed for me. I have always been very careful never to mention your name to her. How did she find out and why did she come?" he queried, speaking rather to himself than to me.

I could not refrain from telling Roland Early a great truth and I did not attempt to soften the blow when I said: "Roland Early you may trust a loving woman always to find out the innermost life of her husband. The life that a man loves to think is concealed from every one in his secret heart."

Tomorrow—Roland Early's Confession.

COULD MAKE GROUP OF WOODEN INDIANS SING

That's What They Say About Walter Jenkins, Song Leader.

That community singing is "good medicine" for every community is the belief of Walter Jenkins, prominent community song leader who comes to Chautauqua on the fifth day. He says, "When we sing together our moods draw closer together. We feel alike; we think in terms of the group."

Someone has said that "Walter Jenkins could make a group of wooden Indians sing." He certainly possesses the uncanny ability of putting every audience in good humor. During 1917 and 1918 he was Northwest Song Leader for the Army and Navy Camps and since that time has been Community Song Leader of Portland, Oregon. During his program Mr. Jenkins will also present a few baritone solos.
