Dog and Pony Circus Coming

All arrangements have been completed for the appearance in Roseburg on Thursday, July 28, for the Lew F. Collins Famous Dog and Pony Circus. The show grounds will be at the corner of Stephens and Sykes streets, and an afternoon and evening performance will be given that day.

From all press reports the entertainment is said to be above the average show of this kind. The management boasts of having the biggest little show on earth, and say they keep that promise.

Cullin's famous troupe of military drilled ponies are one of the many features of the animal program and numerous other circus acts are introduced to give variety to the entertainment. Then the usual clowns will be there to create the laughter and to please the youngsters, as well as the older folks.

Alicia Hammerly
A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Idah McClaine Gibson
The Head Writer

Bab's Plan.

"Are you sure that it will silence gossip, Bab?" I asked when she insisted that I should have Roland Early and his wife to dinner with me at the same hotel where Mr. Early and I had lunched together. "Besides, I shall be very uncomfortable. What will we talk about?"

"Don't you work about that. Let Duane and me do the talking." "But, you are not going to tell Duane," I said in horror. "Why, of course not, silly. Do you imagine that I am going to tell Duane everything that anyone tells me for the rest of my natural life? The work that I have cut out for myself in order to become a successful wife," said Bab sarcastically, "is to keep from telling Duane the things he should not know about my sex, and keep him informed of the things that he should know."

"Bab, are you not entering into a pretty arduous life? You are a constant surprise and amusement to me."

"Well, my dear Altx, you have demonstrated that it is easier for you to attract a man than it is for me. But I believe that I know how to keep them better than you. I have thought a great deal about that part of it. Most women seem to think that catching a man, and keeping him, mean the same thing; but what I have seen among my married friends teaches me that it takes an entirely different bag of tricks to keep a husband than it does to catch him."

"Still, Bab, I do not think that I can sit in a hotel dining room with Roland Early and his wife under the circumstances."

"Yes you can—of course you can. Go to the phone now and call him up before he beats you to it."

"Beats me to it? What do you mean?"

"You are an unsuspecting child even if you are a widow, Altx. How you write the stories you do is a mystery to me. Why, don't you know that the first thing that Early will do after he has reduced his wife to tears by telling her she was a fool or worse to come to you, will be to insist she can only rectify her mischief by inviting you to dinner?"

"I don't quite agree with you Bab. Although it is possible that Mr. Early may ask me to dinner, yet I am sure that he will say nothing to her about her visit to me. To do so he would have to admit that we were on much more intimate terms than he would care to confess."

"You may be right, but I really feel that Early man will have to tell some one his troubles. That is the reason that he is so popular with women. A man of his temperament must have sympathy and he usually goes to the nearest woman to get it."

"Then you are thinking that he will get it from his wife?"

"Of course he will. She loves him, does she not, unreasonably and adoringly? He could get her sympathy even while he was breaking her heart in little pieces if he told her with that sad expression of his that it was hurting him unbearably to use the hammer."

"But this discussion is not getting us anywhere. You must go immediately and invite them to dinner. You have a splendid excuse now that we are here. As I told you, do not worry about the conversation. I'll see to that and I'll guarantee as well to keep Mr. Early on his tiptoes with interest and expectation."

"Act as though nothing had happened," was Bab's last admonition as I took down the receiver.

"I wish to speak to Mr. Early. Tell him it is Mrs. Hammerly speaking," I said to the girl at the office switchboard.

In a moment I recognized Miss Belcher's voice. "Who wishes to speak to Mr. Early? This is his secretary speaking. Can I do anything for you? Mr. Early is very busy preparing for an out of town trip."

I was perfectly well aware that Miss Belcher knew that it was I who wished to speak to Mr. Early but she took this way of annoying me and also of telling me that Mr. Early was leaving town suddenly.

"It is Mrs. Hammerly speaking, Miss Belcher. I would like very much to speak to Mr. Early personally."

"I will tell him, Mrs. Hammerly, but perhaps you had better let him call you up, as he is in conference just at present."

I smiled because I had learned while in the magazine office, just what that word "conference" was made to cover in the distribution of the modern business man's time.

I have known Mr. Early to send out word that he was in conference and could not be disturbed when he was showing me the tricks of his new police dog—and always when he served tea—which he did every afternoon in English fashion—he told the business callers he was in conference while his friends were invited in.

"I think if you do not mind, Miss Belcher, I will hold the wire." I said sweetly. I heard the bang of the receiver on the desk and said to myself, "score one for Alicia."

Immediately Mr. Early's voice, in which there was an agitated note, came to my ears.

"Yes, Mrs. Hammerly!"

"I am very sorry to interrupt you, Mr. Early, especially as Miss Belcher tells me that you are leaving town soon."

"I want you to feel, Mrs. Hammerly, that you are never an interruption and I am very glad you called me, as I was just about to call you."

Tomorrow—Dinner For Six.

FIGURING ON AGE OF EARTH

Geologists Generally Agree That Figures Given in Genealogies of Genesis Are Mythical.

Shakespeare in "As You Like It" says "the poor world is almost 6000 years old," but geologists began to abandon that idea two generations ago. The Jewish Encyclopedia article, "Chronology," states that the figures given in the genealogies of Genesis—of which there are three distinct versions, the Hebrew, the Samaritan and the Greek—are mythical, and the Catholic Encyclopedia, under the same caption, points out that in the year 4000 B. C. great kingdoms were already in existence.

The two greatest geologists that this continent has produced—James Dwight Dana and Sir John William Dawson, of McGill university, Montreal—both of them extremely devout men, after starting out with orthodox views on the subject, made radical changes in the latest editions of their works.

Geologists are now practically agreed that man dates from the late Tertiary or Post-Glacial period, having been contemporaneous with animals long since extinct, at a time when the configuration of the earth was very different from what it is at present. "Adam" is the common Babylonian word meaning "man," and the story of Adam has come down from the Sumerians, or early Babylonians, through Hebrew channels.

MADE THIEF BETRAY HIMSELF

American Indians Used Test That Was Common in Justice Courts of the Middle Ages.

Certain tribes of Indians, according to Prof. Pillsbury, of the department of psychology at the University of Michigan, had a curious way of determining the guilt or innocence of any member of their tribe accused of theft.

"One may observe directly," says Prof. Pillsbury, "the dryness of the mouth in the instance of fear or grief. Strong emotional excitement checks the flow of saliva and causes this dryness, while an increased flow will be noticed in the various pleasurable mental states. Acting upon the assumption that the knowledge of guilt would engender a feeling of dread in the mind of the person guilty of the theft, thus stopping the flow of saliva, whereas innocence would excite no feeling of fear, the Indians gave the suspected members a quantity of dry rice to place in their mouth. The rice was kept in the mouth for a few minutes and then spat out. The suspect whose rice was still dry was adjudged guilty of the theft without further trial, and punished accordingly."

Scotland Vindicated.

A golfer dropped into a New York store to buy a driver.

"This club is off balance," he remarked to the clerk, as he juggled a dice looking brassie.

"That is a special-order club. Let me have it, please," said the clerk nervously, judging the curiosity of the shopper.

The manager, an old friend of the golfer happened along just then.

"Bill," asked the customer, "what the deuce is the matter with this club? Just left the dars thing. It's all off balance."

Bill looked wise, and he looked all around carefully, then he replied, in a stage whisper: "Pete, that is the best club in the bag. It holds just two drinks of hooch. See here, how the handle is hollowed out."

And Scotland was vindicated.—New York World.

The Dog in Scripture.

There are few boy lives or man lives in which a dog has no place, and no other domestic animal has so many contradictory characterizations in literature or in current speech.

The Jewish law declared the dog "unclean," and the most offensive epithet a Jew could use was to declare a man "a dead dog." Moses refused the offering of the price of a dog in the tabernacle, an early instance of tainted money; while Christ in Revelations excludes dogs from heaven in the passage: "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, . . . and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." We recall but one tolerant expression about the dog in Scripture—"for a living dog is better than a dead lion."

Went Bravely to Death.

The nervous prisoner who ever went to the electric chair in Sing Sing was James L. Odell, convicted of murder, according to prison officials. Odell spent his last hours gazing at the picture of his baby, born after he had been sent to the death house, and whom he had never seen. He made no complaint. "We all have to pass through the experience called death," he told the keeper. "I have no fear. I am merely sorry that my life has to be wasted in such a manner." He walked steadily to the chair and was clear-eyed and without a pallor. In a clear voice he said: "Good-by, gentlemen." He refused any drugs to bolster up his nerves and held out his hand, saying: "I am as steady as a strip of steel."

She Wants to Know.

"Husband," said the professor's wife suspiciously.

"Yes, my dear?"

ADVICE TO LOVELORN AND OTHERS

BY MRS. ELLSBURY

A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury Care Roseburg News-Review.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—The young lady I go with is very vain, and sometimes I wonder if this would keep her from making me a good wife. She uses paint and powder all of the time, plucks her eyebrows and various other things of that sort. When we go on all-day picnics she powders and paints several times, and one day when I went to her house unexpectedly to take her for a ride, I had to wait over half an hour while she dressed. What do you think about these things?

Puzzled Victor, Roseburg.

A. I think, Victor, that you show a surprising lack of knowledge of women and their ways. Far from spoiling her, these very things you object to would help in married life, as they show she that is neat and careful with her appearance and would not get slipshod and dowdy looking around the house. A woman who is not careful of her appearance is a good woman to let alone as it naturally follows that she will not be careful of the house or the way the meals are cooked. No girl nowadays does not use some paint or powder, and to my mind they look much better for it. Plucked eyebrows are the rage just now and certainly are not a sign of vanity in a girl. Let her pluck them for a few months. They will not be in style very long. When you go to a girl's home unexpectedly you will have to be prepared for at least a half hour's wait and perhaps more, depending on whether she is dressed to go out when you arrive. Half an hour is not a very long time for a girl to dress and comb her hair, so I think you would better forget about these things, Victor, and lay more stress on the real character of the girl, which is something much different than the paint and powder.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—Will you please tell me a good home remedy in case of burns or scalds. I have been handicapped several times by not knowing what to do. Thank you.

MRS. CARRIE B. Roseburg.

A. Cover with cooking soda and lay wet cloths over it. Whites of eggs and olive oil. Olive oil or linseed oil, plain or mixed with chalk or whiting. Sweet or olive oil and lime water.
