Alicia Hammerly A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Ibb McClune Gibson
The Road Editor

Bab Meets Judge Turner.

"Surely Mr. Henderson would have mentioned his wife, when I asked him to dinner, if he had one," I said to Bab when she asked me whether Allen Henderson was married.

"You cannot always tell," said Bab cynically. "Remember that Early man never mentioned his wife until he had to."

"Does any man ever mention his wife unless he has to, when she is absent, especially if they have been married over five years? In the case of Mr. Henderson, however, it would seem that if he had a wife that he would have to have mentioned her when I invited him to dinner."

"Don't be suspicious, Alix. It doesn't become you."

"I am not suspicious. I am just asking questions of you, sister dear. Many a way you have so much common sense and the poise that goes with it that one always wants to ask you questions. You know I told you once that must not allow the man you love to know how clever you are. Don't show off too much this evening before Duane."

"Oh, I am not going to sit beside Duane, I am going to sit beside Mr. Early."

"So you have my dinner table all arranged?" I said with mild sarcasm.

"Of course. You are going to have Mr. Henderson on one side of you and Duane on the other. Next to Duane comes Mrs. Early, then Mr. Early and then I am between Mr. Early and Mr. Henderson."

"Oh, Bab, we can't put Mr. Early and Mrs. Early together."

"Don't worry I'll keep Early busy and I'll slip word to Duane that you want him to be particularly nice to Mrs. Early. That will leave you for Henderson. It such a small party anyway that we can all talk to each other."

"Well, if you have got that settled Bab, what are you going to wear? Did you have your luggage sent up here or to a hotel?"

"We haven't any baggage except those two handbags in the hall. You remember, I told you that I was not going to have a trousseau. I told Duane that I could buy some frocks here if I needed them. Dad gave me five hundred dollars when I started away, so if you are equal to it let's go down and buy me a dinner gown and spend some of it."

After I had ordered my table, flowers and dinner at the Hotel, we started out to buy Bab a gown. She found one in white, embroidered in white beads with beaded ostrich feathers about the neck and fringing the edge of the pointed skirt. It was charming.

Of course I committed the extravagance of buying a gown too, as I saw the most beautiful jade green taffeta made with long panels over a short green skirt, each panel gathered together at the bottom and held in by a tiny bunch of Cecil Brunner roses. It was the first time that I had worn anything but black or white since my widowhood. I rather wanted to surprise Mr. Early, as I knew that he had gotten used to expecting me in white, for he had often remarked that he was glad I wore white evening dresses, as they were so becoming and that incidentally they made every woman who wore colors either tawdry or bizarre. Tonight I was going to show him that I could wear a distinct color and still look neither tawdry or bizarre.

I got out my jade ear-rings and lavalliere and my jade comb, bracelet and rings, all of which had been a wedding present to me from Duane.

"It was very sweet of you, Alix," said Bab, "to honor Duane by wearing his bridal present. He was remarking the other day that he did not think that you cared for jade, as you had never worn it to his knowledge since he gave it to you."

"I do not think I have been with Duane on formal occasions since my marriage. I love jade, dear, and you watch me tonight. I expect to look the best that I ever have in my life."

It was not until quite late in the afternoon that I remembered that I had not told Mr. Early that Mr. Henderson was dining with us and I felt that he should know this that he might provide a seat for him at the theater.

I persuaded Bab to go with me to the office. We arrived about half past four. Miss Belcher, Alice Gordon, Judge Turner were with Mr. Early in his private office. The boy at the door was new and did not recognize me, so he said "I am very sorry, madam, but Mr. Early is in conference."

"I am invited to the party," I said with a smile and turning to Bab I gave the pleasant information. "We are just in time for tea."

I was very glad to see Judge Turner. I felt a little warm thrill about my heart that I never expected to feel again. I had no idea that I had missed him so much and I knew when I saw him that I wanted to go to him with all my problems. He seemed to me to be quite as much a haven of rest as the everlasting arm.

He, however, seemed rather pre-occupied, although he immediately took to Bab and they had a most beautiful time while repartee passed back and forth with rapid-like rapidity.

Bab certainly is a clever woman. Men love to talk to her, but men pay more attention to me. I wonder why. I am not nearly so brilliant a talker as my sister.

Mr. Early was quite as poised and suave as usual. He greeted me with just the right degree of friendliness but nevertheless he contrived to give me more than an intimation that there was a little personal note in it for myself alone.

Alice was much perturbed about her husband. He was not as well as usual. "I was going to call you up this morning, Alix," she said, "and ask you if you couldn't find time to come over and see Bill. You always cheer him up so much."

"I will go over tomorrow, Alice. Tell him, will you not?"

"He will be so glad to see you, dear. The pain is so great that he really welcomes the visitors whom he loves, as he says they make him forget some of it."

Here Miss Belcher interrupted in a lightsome voice, "How do you like our city, Mrs. Benton?"

The judge placed his big hand over Alice's tiny one.

COAST AUTO LINES

Is this your car on Sunday?

A Sunday morning—crisp, sunny weather—roads hard and smooth. What a day for motoring!

Your car is "dead" in the garage. It may be carbon-clogged cylinders and valves—burned-out bearings—any one of a multitude of troubles.

You are pretty safe in blaming your oil. Seventy-five per cent of engine troubles are caused by oils poor in quality or wrong in type.

Sunoco Motor Oil insures freedom from carbon—clean, compression-tight cylinders—smooth, noiseless bearings.

We will tell you which of the six Sunoco types fits your engine.

EXAMINATION SET. WASHINGTON, July 22.—A civil

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels, who is to visit Portland, Astoria and the Columbia river, as well as the naval base at Astoria, has had to delay his trip to the Pacific for several weeks. One of the most important in the series of bombing tests, now coming to a close, which sought to test the relative superiority of aircraft and various types of war vessels. He will not return to Washington for a day or two, and will not be able to announce his itinerary for several days after that. He plans tentatively to leave Washington about August 1, but that date is subject to change.

LELAND L. SMITH ASSIGNED. WASHINGTON, July 22.—Leland L. Smith of Portland, who has been assigned as counsel to Salgon, China was one of the nineteen consuls received by Secretary Hughes yesterday, before leaving for their homes. Mr. Smith will be in charge of considerable interests of the U. S. in that territory, and has opportunities for service and advancement in the post.

WESTERN TRIP DELAYED. WASHINGTON, July 22.—Secretary of the interior department, who was to visit Crater Lake National park on a western trip, was to have left Washington July 15, but that has been changed now to August 1 and another delay may be added.
